Part I.—Meaning of Specific Performance.

SECT. 1.—Nature of Specific Performance.

1. Specific performance is equitable relief given by the court in cases of breach of contract, in the form of a judgment that the defendant do actually perform the contract according to its terms and stipulations (a).

Equitable relief by court.

2. Disobedience to such judgment beyond the mere nonpayment of money, constitutes a contempt of court and is punishable by all the consequences of such contempt, as, for example, by imprisonment (b) if the defendant is able to perform the contract, and declines or omits to do so.

Consequence of disobedience to order of court.

3. As a general rule, the proper remedy of a person seeking to enforce the observation of a positive contract is an action for specific performance, as distinct from the enforcement of a negative contract by injunction (c). As a further distinction, it should be noted that an action for specific performance is appropriate only to the enforcement of the obligations of an executory as distinguished from an executed contract (d). For this purpose an executory contract is an agreement which is not intended between the parties to be the final instrument regulating their mutual relations under their contract; an executed contract, on the contrary, is a contract in which all has been already done to settle finally the relative positions of the parties (e).

SECT. 2.—Kindred but Distinct Remedies.

Specific performance distinguished from other remedies :—

4. Specific performance is an extraordinary remedy given by the court, and must be distinguished from certain other legal or equitable remedies which appear to resemble it, but are in fact different in nature. In particular the following distinctions may usefully be drawn :—

Injunction.

(1) The obligations arising under an executed contract (f), that is, under the final instrument which regulates the rights of the parties, are enforced, not by judgment for specific performance, but by an injunction (g).

Enforcement of express trusts.

(2) Actions for the enforcement of express trusts differ from actions for specific performance, in that trusts are not matters of contract, but involve obligations of purely equitable force, to which formerly only a Court of Chancery could have given effect (h).

Enforcement of constructive trusts.

(3) A constructive trust arising from fraud or breach of a fiduciary relationship may be enforced by the court by virtue of its independent jurisdiction (i), as being an equitable obligation.

Delivery of chattels.

(4) The delivery of a specific chattel, if the right to such delivery flowed from contract, could be enforced by the Court of Chancery; and even a right to delivery not flowing from contract might be enforced by the court (j). In the latter case, the remedy closely resembled the remedy of specific performance. A court of common law also had even before the Judicature Act, 1873 (k), power to order the delivery of a specific chattel without giving the defendant the option of retaining it on paying its value (l). Such an action differs from an action for specific performance, since it is based on an allegation not that a contract to deliver has not been performed, but that the chattel is the property of the plaintiff and is being wrongfully detained by the defendant (m). SECT. 2.

(e) Wolverhampton and Walsall Rail. Co. v. London and North Western Rail. Co. (1873), L. R. 16 Eq. 433. As an illustration, reference may be made to an agreement to execute a deed. The agreement is an executory contract; the deed is in most cases an executed contract, an action upon which would lie outside the scope of the peculiar jurisdiction in specific performance. It should be noted, however, that there are many deeds which in ordinary course contain covenants which appear to be executory contracts and would usually be enforced by an action for specific performance, such as the covenant for further assurance in a conveyance of land* (see title SALE OF LAND, Vol. XXV., pp. 426, 463), and a covenant to settle after-acquired property in a marriage settlement (see p. 71, post; title SETTLEMENTS, Vol. XXV., pp. 548 et seq.). As to enforcing the obligations of a final instrument, see the text, infra.

(f) See the text, supra.

(g) See Wolverhampton and Walsall Rail. Co. v. London and North Western Rail. Co., supra; Burrows v. Greenwood (1840), 4 Y. & C. (EX.) 251 (voluntary contract); and see, generally, title INJUNCTION, Vol. XVII., pp. 235, 243 et seq.

Kindred but
Remedies.

(5) Where for good consideration a mortgage or charge has been created in a form not enforceable at law, the court can enforce the charge as an equitable right; this, however, is not a case of specific performance (n). In a proper case the court may also enforce the execution of a legal mortgage or charge; this is a case of specific performance (n). Enforcement of charge.

(6) An action of mandamus to compel performance of a duty is analogous to an action for specific performance. Such an action, however, does not lie for the purpose of enforcing a duty arising merely from a personal contract, but only a duty of a public or quasi-public character (o). Mandamus.

SECT. 3.—Equitable Nature of Relief by Specific Performance.

5. The jurisdiction to grant specific performance, formerly exercisable only by a court of equity, is now vested in all branches of the High Court of Justice (p), but the specific performance of contracts between vendors and purchasers of real estates, including contracts for leases is assigned to the Chancery Division (q); the jurisdiction still retains its character as an equitable remedy, and the old principles of equitable relief apply (r). Application of equitable principles.

The remedy is special and extraordinary in its character, and the court has a discretion to grant it, or to leave the parties to their rights at law (s). The discretion of a court exercising equitable jurisdiction is, however, not an arbitrary or capricious discretion; it is a discretion to be exercised on fixed principles in accordance with the previous authorities (t). It is not simply a question of what the individual judge thinks is fair or reasonable; the exercise of his discretion must be judicial (u). If the contract is valid in form and has been made between competent parties Exercise of court's dis-

and is unobjectionable in its nature and circumstances, specific performance is in effect granted as a matter of course (x), even though the judge may think it involves hardship (a). The mere existence, however, of a valid contract is not in itself enough to bring about the interference of the court; the conduct of the plaintiff, such as delay, acquiescence, breach on his part, or some other circumstance outside the contract, may render it inequitable to enforce it (b), or the contract itself may, for example, on the ground of misdescription, be such that the court will refuse to enforce it (c). On grounds of this nature the court exercises its discretion.

Part II.—Limits of the Jurisdiction.

SECT. 1.—Limitations Applying to Equitable Jurisdiction Generally.

Attitude of court of equity to common law.

Supplementary
jurisdiction.

6. From the nature and origin of equitable jurisdiction, and from its relation to the system of law enforced by the courts of common law, certain rules resulted which, before the Judicature Acts (d), limited and determined the method on which equity acted (e). The most fundamental principles were (1) that equity followed the law (f), and (2) that it applied its remedies as supplementary to legal remedies and on the ground of their inadequacy (g). On the former principle, it was held before the time of Lord Somers that a court of equity would not entertain a suit for specific performance unless the plaintiff was in a position to recover damages at law (h). This principle was, however, overruled (i), and in many cases a plaintiff was granted specific performance where his legal rights were doubtful or unenforceable; for, though a court of (c) See, e.g., Re Davis and Cavey (1888), 40 Ch. D. 601; Re Scott and Alvarez's Contract, Scott v. Alvarez, [1895] 2 Ch. 603, C. A.; pp. 42 et seq., post.

(d) As to the Judicature Acts, see title COURTS, Vol. IX., p. 51, note (g).

(e) See, generally, title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., pp. 1 et seq., and, in particular, ibid., pp. 65 et seq.; see also Re Scott and Alvarez's Contract, Scott v. Alvarez, supra, at pp. 612, 615.

(f) See title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., p. 68.

(g) See ibid., p. 11; and for illustrations see pp. 13 et seq., post.

(h) Dodsley v. Kinnersley (1761), Amb. 403, per CLARKE, M.R., at p. 406; compare Chandos (Duchess Dowager) v. Brownlow (1791), 2 Ridg. Parl. Cas. 345, 416 (covenant for renewal of lease).

(i) Compare Bettesworth v. St. Paul's (Dean and Chapter) (1728), 1 Bro. Parl. Cas. 240; and see title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., p. 12.

equity would not enforce a covenant void at law (k), it would relieve the plaintiff on certain terms against matters which at common law would work a forfeiture (l). But the court would not interfere except on the ground that, while relief should in conscience be given, no adequate relief was obtainable at law (m); hence it would not interfere in cases where adequate damages were recoverable at law, or no damage had in law been suffered, as, for instance, in the case of an agreement entirely unperformed to grant a loan (n). Since the Judicature Acts (o) the above rules still limit the exercise of the jurisdiction to grant specific performance (p).

Limitations Applying to Equitable Jurisdiction
Generally.

7. The attitude of the court to the Statutes of Limitation (q) and to the Statute of Frauds (r) illustrates the principles on which the court acted, since it followed the legal rules as to limitation of actions (s), while it refused in certain circumstances to allow the Statute of Frauds (r) to be made an instrument of fraud (t).

Attitude of court towards statute law.

8. A further limit on the jurisdiction of equity was that it acted in personam (a).

Jurisdiction
in personam.

SECT. 2.—Voluntary Contracts.

9. The court does not enforce specific performance of contracts which are voluntary, whether under seal or not: a party claiming specific performance must show some consideration proceeding from himself (b); even a past consideration does not

Not specifically performed.

(k) See Nordenfelt v. Maxim Nordenfelt Guns and Ammunition Co., [1894] A. C. 535, 563; Bozon v. Farlow (1816), 1 Mer. 459 (purchase of an attorney's business); May v. Thomson (1882), 20 Ch. D. 705, C. A. (purchase of medical practice).

(l) Thus, a plaintiff would fail at law for an unessential misdescription, but equity could enforce with compensation; see Mortlock v. Buller (1804), 10 Ves. 292, 305; and similarly where the plaintiff has substantially, but not exactly, performed a condition; see Davis v. Hone (1805), 2 Sch. & Lef. 341, 347. Courts of equity also interfered on behalf of an assignee to give effect to his rights, and would enforce a contract which had become unenforceable at law by the death of the covenantor; see Milnes v. Gery (1807), 14 Ves. 400, 403.

(m) Compare Wright v. Bell (1818), 5 Price, 325 (purchase of a debt), where there was, apparently, no remedy at law; and see p. 13, post.

(d) Jefferys v. Jefferys, supra, per Lord CATTENHAM, L.C., at p. 141. In the case of voluntary societies for purposes of pleasure, scientific pursuits, charity or philanthropy, the court does not interfere to enforce contracts between members of such societies, so long as no right of property is involved (Rigby v. Connol (1880), 14 Ch. D. 482, per JESSEL, M.R., at p. 487).

(f) This rule is mainly based on the inability of the court to supervise performance (compare Newbery v. James (1817), 2 Mer. 446 (expired patent); and see title BUILDING CONTRACTS, ENGINEERS, AND ARCHITECTS, Vol. III., pp. 248, 249), but also on the want of definiteness usually involved in such contracts, and further on the principle that damages are generally an adequate remedy; see Errington v. Aynesly (1788), 2 Bro. C. C. 341; Lucas v. Commerford (1790), 3 Bro. C. C. 166, dissenting from dicta in Buxton v. Lister (1746), 3 Atk. 382, 385, and *London (City) v. however, is subject to important exceptions(g), and a decree for specific performance of a contract to build will be made if the following conditions are fulfilled:—(1) that the building work is defined by the contract between the parties; (2) that the plaintiff has a substantial interest in the performance of the contract of such a nature that he cannot be adequately compensated in damages; (3) that the defendant has by the contract obtained possession of land on which the work is contracted to be done(h).

Co. v. A dictum of Lord LOUGHBOROUGH, L.C., in *Mosely v. compel persons against their will to maintain continuous personal and confidential relations (k).

This principle applies not merely to contracts of employment, but to all contracts which involve the rendering of continuous services by one person to another, as, for instance, a contract to work a railway line (l). Contracts of agency, such as that of a shipbroker (m) or an auctioneer (n), come under the same rule; and a contract of apprenticeship is not enforced against an infant (o).

SECT. 5.—Contracts Lacking Mutuality.

Refusal of relief for want of mutuality.

12. Want of mutuality is in general a ground for refusing a judgment of specific performance: if a contract cannot be enforced against one party by reason of circumstances existing at the date of the contract, such as personal incapacity or the nature of the contract, that party will not be enabled to enforce the contract against the other party. Thus, an infant cannot sue for specific performance (p), since he cannot be sued therefor (q); a plaintiff cannot enforce a contract which could not be enforced against himself as involving performance of personal service or continuous acts, even though the consideration to be performed by the Cas. 249 (where specific performance was refused of a contract to grant an office the holder of which would have had the right and duty of performing work of a confidential character). If the consideration or part of the consideration is work of a personal character, the court refuses to compel performance of any part of the contract on the ground of want of mutuality (see the text, infra); see, however, Fortescue v. Lostwithiel and Fowey Rail. Co., [1894] 3 Ch. 621 (where specific performance was granted by KEKEWICH, J., of a contract between a landowner and a railway company which included as a minor part of a larger contract otherwise proper for specific performance a stipulation for certain acts in the nature of personal services).

(k) Johnson v. Shrewsbury and Birmingham Rail. Co. (1853), 3 De G. M. & G. 914, C. A.; Bainbridge v. Smith (1889), 41 Ch. D. 462, 474; De Francesco v. Barnum (1890), 45 Ch. D. 430; Whitwood Chemical Co. v. Hardman, [1891] 2 Ch. 416, C. A.; but in Rigby v. Connol (1880), 14 Ch. D. 482, JESSEL, M.R., at p. 487, seems to confine the principle to cases where no rights of property are involved. On analogous grounds, an injunction is not granted if it in effect would compel the performance of a contract of the nature here discussed; see Chapman v. Westerbj, [1913] W. N. 277; title INJUNCTION, Vol. XVII., p. 246; see also ibid., pp. 242, 243.

defendant is not in itself of a nature to exclude specific performance (r); a vendor of property in or over which he had no estate or power at the time of the sale may be met by this fact as a defence to a suit by him of specific performance (s); and a tenant in tail cannot in general enforce a contract entered into by the tenant for life (t).

SECT. 5.
Contracts Lacking Mutuality.

13. The want of mutuality must be judged of as at the date of the contract. The fact that a defendant by his own neglect or default has since the date of the contract lost the right to enforce it will not prevent its being enforced against him (a). Conversely, if the terms of the contract were such as originally to preclude specific performance, performance of these terms by the plaintiff will not obviate the objection (b).

Want of mutuality material at date of contract.

14. There are, however, certain exceptions, or apparent exceptions, to the rule regarding lack of mutuality (c):—

Exceptions to rule as to want of mutuality:—

(1) A conditional contract must be distinguished from one lacking in mutuality, as, for example, a contract where one party has

(t) Armiger v. Clarke (1722), Bunb. 111; Ricketts v. Bell (1847), 1 De G. & Sm. 335. It is, however, now clear (notwithstanding dicta of DE GREY, C.J., in Campbell v. Leach (1775), Amb. 740, 749) that mutuality exists between a remainderman and a person who has agreed to take a lease from a tenant for life with a leasing power; see Shannon v. Bradstreet (1803), 1 Sch. & Lef. 52; Ingle v. Vaughan Jenkins, [1900] 2 Ch. 368; approved in Capital and Counties Bank, Ltd. v. Rhodes, [1903] 1 Ch. 631, C. A.; and see title LANDLORD AND TENANT, Vol. XVIII., p. 364. Again, contracts entered into by a tenant for life under the Settled Land Acts are enforceable by and against his successor in title (Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), s. 31), and a tenant for life can give effect to some contracts of his predecessors in title (Settled Land Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 69), s. 67); see title SETTLEMENTS, Vol. XXV., pp. 664, 665, 667. For other instances of unenforceable contracts, see Avery v. Griffin (1868), L. R. 6 Eq. 606; Kennedy v. May (1863), 11 W. R. 358; Hamilton v. Grant (1815), 3 Dow, 33, H. L. Co.* (1852), 1 De G. M. & G. 721, C. A.

an option by the exercise of which the other party becomes bound to perform his part (d).

(2) The objection of lack of mutuality may be precluded by the conduct of the party against whom the contract was originally unenforceable. Thus in cases where, owing to the vendor's original incapacity to complete, the contract was unenforceable, the purchaser may preclude himself from raising that objection either by not repudiating after learning of the incapacity, or by recognising the contract by his conduct (e); and so, while a contract by a trustee to purchase property from a cestui que trust is, generally speaking, not binding on the cestui que trust (f), the latter may, by bringing an action for specific performance, waive the want of mutuality and enforce the contract as against the trustee (g).

(3) Where a memorandum of a contract to satisfy the Statute of Frauds (h) has been signed by one party only, that party is not allowed to plead, in answer to a claim to enforce the contract, that the other party, not having signed any memorandum, could not have been sued (i).

(4) Where at the time of the contract a vendor had not the full interest he agreed to sell, the purchaser can, as a rule, claim a conveyance of such interest as the vendor possessed, with compensation, though the vendor would not have a corresponding right against the purchaser (l).

(d) Weeding v. Weeding (1861), 1 John. & H. 424 (option to purchase); compare Chesterman v. Mann (1851), 9 Hare, 206 (covenant to renew lease on request); Palmer v. Scott (1830), 1 Russ. & M. 391 (unilateral undertaking of one party); compare Otway v. Brailhouse (1679), Cas. temp. Finch, 405.

(e) In such cases the purchaser, on discovering the vendor's defective title, can repudiate the contract. This is an equitable right affecting the equitable remedy of specific performance; but should he fail to repudiate and the vendor perfect his title, he is taken to have waived the objection, and in particular he cannot claim to repudiate after a decree for specific performance without the consent of the court (Halkett v. Dudley (Earl), [1907] 1 Ch. 590; Salisbury v. Hatcher (1842), 2 Y. & C. Ch. Cas. 54; Wylson v. Dunn (1887), 34 Ch. D. 569); see also p. 11, ante.

Yielding* (1805), 2 Sch. & Lef. 549, Lord REDESDALE, L.C., expressed the opinion that the principle did not apply when the purchaser knew at the date of the contract of the defect in the vendor's title. This opinion has been dissented from by English judges, who have

15. The court does not enforce an agreement if it is merely ancillary to a principal contract which is itself unenforceable; the adjunct must go along with the principal agreement (l). Thus, specific performance may be refused of an agreement to execute a bond where the bond is to secure performance of a contract to execute works, which contract could not be enforced, the bond being merely ancillary to the works, the substance of the contract (m). Similarly, where a person agrees to employ another as broker and also agrees to insert his name as broker in all his advertisements, the court, being unable to order performance of the former, which is the substantial, agreement, refuses to enforce the latter (n).

16. The ground for the interference of a court of equity by enforcing specific performance of contracts being the inadequacy of the remedy at common law, which was by payment of a sum of money as damages (o), it follows that the court does not so interfere in cases where a money payment affords an adequate remedy (p). The principle appears to be the same whether the contract leaves the amount of damages in the event of breach unliquidated, or whether it specifies a sum by way of penalty or liquidated damages; but the latter class of cases raises certain questions which are considered later (q).

Principle as to damages being sufficient remedy.

The common law view that a breach of contract could always be satisfied by a money payment is open to criticism, as, for instance, that the remedy depends for its efficacy on the personal solvency of the defendant (r), or, again, that it compels the plaintiff to accept a conjectural sum of money instead of a specific matter which may be of uncertain value (s); but neither reason is in itself a sufficient ground for granting specific performance (a).

Sub-SECT. 2.—No Express Provision for Money Payment.

17. The following illustrations may be given of contracts in which the court refuses specific performance on the ground that damages in money would afford a sufficient remedy.

The court refuses specific performance of a sale of Government stock (b). On the other hand, the court enforces a contract for the sale or purchase of shares in a company (c), unless there is a free market in the shares, so that the vendor or purchaser may easily make a substituted contract and be compensated for the difference in price, if any, by means of damages (d).

The court also refuses specific performance of a contract to sell or purchase chattels which are not specific or ascertained (e). It may, however, specifically enforce a contract to deliver specific or ascertained chattels (f), and it does enforce such a contract (g) or

The decisions of LEACH, V.-C., in Doloret v. Rothschild (1824), 1 Sim. & St. 590 (contract for sale of Neapolitan stock: specific performance granted, and decree for delivery of certificates), and in Withy v. Cottle (1823), 1 Sim. & St. 174 (specific performance on vendor's bill or contract for sale of life annuity payable out of dividends of stock), are contrary to the general current of authority; compare Gardener v. Pullen (1700), 2 Vern. 394 (sale of East India stock decreed in specie). In Brealey v. Collins (1831), You. 317, a contract to sell a life interest in the public funds was not enforced.

Mendel* (1878), 8 Ch. D. 235, C. A.; as to specific performance of a contract to take shares, see, further, pp. 73 et seq., post.

sale of china-jars); Thorn v. Public Works Commissioners (1863), 32 Beav. 490. In Dowling v. Betjemann (1862), 2 John. & H. 544, it was held that, as in the contract the value of the chattel has been fixed by the vendor, specific performance, in the circumstances of that case, should not be granted at the suit of the vendor, as the matter has been reduced to terms of money; but this rule cannot, it seems, apply in ordinary actions at the suit of the purchaser for specific performance of a contract for the sale of goods. It is not clear how far the court will exercise its jurisdiction where the thing sold, though not unique, is of special value and importance to the buyer or person entitled: see North v. Great Northern Rail. Co. (1860), 2 Giff. 64, where the court restrained the sale, under a claim to detain, of wagons of the plaintiffs essential to the carrying on of the plaintiffs' business; Burton v. Lister (1746), 3 Atk. 383, per Lord HARDWICKE, L.C.; and see note (c), p. 14, ante. In Nubrown v. Thornton (1804), 10 Ves. 159, Lord ELDON, L.C., ordered delivery of chattels on a farm, such as stock etc. necessary for the enjoyment of the farm, as being included in the contract to let the tenant have both farm and chattels. between penalty and liquidated damages (n) affect the answer to this question (o). The answer is to be found by considering the intention of the parties, that is, whether the party bound to performance has an alternative choice given to him by the contract, to perform or to pay the agreed sum, or whether he is bound to do a certain thing, with a penal sum or sum by way of liquidated damages attached as security (p). In the latter case the court, notwithstanding the penal clause, enforces performance, if the contract be such that without the penal clause it would have been proper for specific performance (q).

19. Where the contract contains a penalty clause, the contractee has his right in law upon the contract for the money payable under the clause, and also his right in equity to specific relief; he can, at his election, obtain either form of relief; but he cannot obtain both forms (r).

20. Thus, the ordinary provision on a sale of land that in case of default by the purchaser he shall forfeit his deposit and the seller shall be entitled to resell and claim any deficiency as liquidated damages does not exclude a claim for specific performance by the seller (s).

(s) For instance, see Crutchley v. Jerningham (1817), 2 Mer. 502, 506; Long v. Bowring (1864), 33 Beav. 585; and see title SALE OF LAND, Vol. XXV., p. 400. For other instances of specific performance, notwithstanding a penal clause, see Howard v. Hopkyns (1742), 2 Atk. 371; Jewdine v. Agate (1829), 3 Sim. 129, 141; Logan v. Wienholt (1833), 1 Cl. & Fin. 611, H. L.; Butler v. Powis (1845), 2 Coll. 156; National Provincial Bank of England v. Marshall (1888), 40 Ch. D. 112, C. A. It is no bar to specific performance that the penalty is by bond; compare Hobson v. Trevor (1723), 2 P. Wms. 191; Clarkson v. Edge (1863), 33 Beav. 227; Roper v. Bartholomew, Butler v. Bartholomew, supra. The same principle is applied where the relief is claimed by way of injunction, as, for instance, in covenants not to carry on a certain trade or business, with a penalty clause superadded; see Bird v. Lake (1863), 1 Hem. & M. 111; compare Clarkson v. Edge, supra; Gravelly v. Barnard (1874), L. R. 18 Eq. 518; Robinson (William) & Co., Ltd. v. Heuer, [1898] 2 Ch. 451, 458, C. A.; title INJUNCTION, Vol. XVII., p. 236.

21. The court may treat the penal sum as security, and not as an alternative mode of performance, notwithstanding that the obligation is expressed in an alternative form (t).

Specific performance may also be ordered where the benefit of performance will go to one person and that of the penalty to another (a).

The relative smallness of the penalty may be a ground for treating it as mere security for due performance (b), though there is no general rule to this effect (c).

22. There are, however, cases where the court holds on the construction of the contract that the intention of the parties is that the act may be done by the contracting party or that payment may be made by him of the stipulated amount, so that the contracting party has in effect the option either of doing the act which he has contracted to do or paying the specified sum, the contract being alternative, either to do or abstain from doing on payment of the sum in money (d). The question is one of construction depending on the precise form of the contract and the circumstances of the case (e), but the court leans to treating the penalty clause as intended to secure due performance of the agreement (f).

23. Where the sums payable vary in amount or frequency with the things to be done or abstained from, the payment may be treated as an alternative mode of performance; thus, in the case of leases, it may be held that the tenant is given the option of doing certain things on payment of an increased rent or other penalty (g), though not if there is a stipulation that the doing of the act is to work a forfeiture (h).

The court may treat covenants to perform or pay as alternative where specific performance would work unreasonable results (i).

SECT. 8.—Cases where Performance of the Contract would be Valueless.

such as a revocable deed, since it would be idle to do that which might instantly be undone by one of the parties. Instances of the application of this principle are afforded by the refusal to order specific performance of an agreement for a partnership at will (k), or of a contract for a lease which is to contain a proviso for re-entry on breach of a covenant which has already been broken in such a way by the plaintiff as to entitle the defendant to re-enter (l). Conversely, specific performance has been refused on the ground that performance has become valueless to the defendant (m).

A judgment is not given against a foreign sovereign (o), or against a person not capable of being served within the jurisdiction (p), save that service of a writ may be allowed out of the jurisdiction when any contract affecting land or hereditaments within the jurisdiction is sought to be enforced in the action, or when the action is founded on any breach or alleged breach within the jurisdiction of any contract wherever made which according to its terms ought to be performed within the jurisdiction, unless the defendant is domiciled or ordinarily resident in Scotland or Ireland (q).

Turst* (1703), 1 Bro. Parl. Cas. 129 (specific performance of contract made abroad relating to foreign land, the parties being permanently resident here); *Norris v. Part III.—Defences to Claim for Specific Performance.

SECT. 1.—Contract not in Fact Concluded.

27. Where it is sought to enforce specific performance of a contract (a), the court must be satisfied (1) that there is a concluded contract in fact; (2) that the contract so concluded is not incomplete by reason that the parties have failed to agree, expressly or by implication, on some essential matter; (3) that the contract is precise and certain, or, in other words, that, although all essential matters may have been dealt with, there is not such uncertainty and vagueness that exact performance cannot be ordered (b).

Contract must be concluded.

28. Whether there is in fact a concluded contract depends on the rules of law (c) relating to the elements of a valid contract—in particular, with respect to offer and acceptance. This question is distinct from another, namely, whether the rules of law relating to the form in which a contract must be embodied, or evidenced before the court, have been observed (d). Cases of concluded contracts

(a) It has been questioned what is included in the term "contract"; a judge's order made by consent is from many aspects a contract, with further elements added by reason of the order of the court; see Wentworth v. Bullen (1829), 9 B. & C. 840; Lievesley v. Gilmore (1866), L. R. 1 C. P. 570; Conolan v. Leyland (1884), 27 Ch. D. 632; but specific performance of such an order was refused in Thames Iron Works Co. v. Patent Derrick Co. (1860), 1 John. & H. 93, by PAGE WOOD, V.-C., it being the order of another court and providing its own method of enforcement. In Caton v. Caton (1867), L. R. 2 H. L. 127, the House of Lords differed in opinion as to whether instructions for a settlement were a contract for a settlement or instructions for a contract. A recital in a deed may be evidence of a contract (Wilson v. Keating (1859), 4 De G. & J. 583, C. A., affirming S. C., 27 Beav. 121 (transferee of shares held bound to pay on contract evidenced by transfer, though a mere nominee)).

must of course be distinguished from cases where the parties have never got beyond the stage of negotiation (e), or where an offeree has purported to accept an offer which has lapsed by delay or other reason (f).

29. In certain cases where a representation has been made by one party to another with the object of inducing the other to act in a certain way, and the other has so acted, courts of equity, in dealing with claims for specific performance or other equitable relief, have proceeded on the principle of requiring the defendant to make good the representations (g). Cases of this nature, which have sometimes been described as involving the doctrine of "equitable estoppel" (h), ought, it seems, to be dealt with as cases of contract, the question being whether the representation amounts to a promise which can be enforced (i), and they should be distin-

(e) The old practice of the Court of Chancery in a case of doubt was to refuse specific performance and leave the parties to establish their rights at common law (Huddleston v. Briscoe (1805), 11 Ves. 583; Stratford v. Bosworth (1813), 2 Ves. & B. 341; Skelton v. Cole (1857), 1 De G. & J. 587, C. A.). Questions of this nature have turned on whether the acceptance was clear and unambiguous (see Thomas v. Blackman (1844), 1 Coll. 301; Warner v. Willington (1856), 3 Drew. 523; Horsfall v. Garnett (1858), 6 W. R. 387), or conditional (see Crossley v. Maycock (1874), L. R. 18 Eq. 180 (general acceptance accompanied by special conditions of sale); Lewis v. Brass (1877), 3 Q. B. (i) "There is no middle term, no tertium quid, between a representation so made as to be effective for such a purpose and a contract; they are identical. That which leads to the representation being made and acted upon, determines its nature, gives it the character of a contract, or leaves guished from cases of estoppel in the ordinary sense of the term (h). Where the representation operates simply as an estoppel, it can only receive effect, apart from questions of fraud (l), as a step in the evidence on which a claim in contract or other obligation is based (n), and must then be a statement of an existing fact (n). If, however, the representation is sought to be relied on as a promise, it is necessary to show that it imported a binding obligation (o), and not merely an honourable engagement (p). Only in the former case is it enforced as a promise.

(o) Cases illustrating this principle are mainly cases in reference to marriage contracts entered into on the faith of representations made by third parties interested; see the cases cited in title SETTLEMENTS, Vol. XXV., p. 536, note (s); and see Montgomery v. Keilly (1827), 1 Bl. (N. S.) 364, H. L.; Viret v. Viret (1880), 17 Ch. D. 365, n. In Hulton v. Rossiter (1855), 7 De G. M. & G. 9, C. A., the representation was made by a person not related to the parties to the marriage. It must of course be shown that the representation actually induced the marriage or other act; see Goldieutt v. Townsend (1860), 28 Beav. 445. Piggott v. Stratton (1859), 1 De G. F. & J. 33, C. A., affirming S. C., John. 341 (explained in Spicer v. Martin (1888), 14 App. Cas. 12, per Lord MACNAGHTEN, at p. 23, and in Low v. Bouverie, supra, per KAY, L.J., at p. 110), related to a collateral representation on the faith of which a lease was taken. As to collateral agreements of this nature, see, further, title DEEDS AND OTHER INSTRUMENTS, Vol. X., p. 447.

(p) As illustrations of cases where the terms of the representation are held to preclude a promissory intention, see Maunsell v. Hedges, White etc., supra; Jorden v. Money (1854), 5 H. L. Cas. 185; Maddison v. Alderson (1883), 8 App. Cas. 467, disapproving Lofus v. Maw (1862), 3 Giff. 592; and, for other examples, see Walpole (Lord) v. Orford (Lord) (1797), 3 Ves. 402; Morehouse v. Colvin (1851), 15 Beav. 341; Re Fickus, Farina v. Fickus, supra. In such cases the court has held either that the language used was too vague to raise an obligation in law, or that it was not intended to be binding and left the representation within the sphere of merely honourable engagement. In other cases, where a representation has been followed by a formal settlement which has not embodied the representation, the settlement prima facie supercedes the representation; see Lorley v. Heath (1866), 1 De G. F. & J. 489, C. A.; and see the cases cited in title SETTLEMENTS, Vol. XXV., p. 537, note (i).

Time at which com-

Effect of part performance on uncertainty.

Effect of fraud.

Uncertainty may arise in various ways, which may be classified as follows:—(1) Where the contract is so vague in its general terms that the obligations of the parties are not ascertainable (r); (2) where the subject-matter of the contract is not sufficiently identified (s); (3) where the parties are not sufficiently identified (t); (4) where, in the case of a sale, the price is not ascertained (a); and (5) where some material term of the contract is omitted (b).

31. The completeness of a contract is to be determined at the commencement of the action (c), since it is at that time that non-performance must be incapable of justification (d). Performance is, however, ordered even if the contract is incomplete at that date, if the incompleteness is due to the default of the defendant and is such that it can be remedied or compensated (e); or where a term which is not then ascertained is capable of being ascertained by means available to the court (f).

32. Whenever objection is raised to the enforcement of a contract on the grounds of uncertainty, the court is more anxious to enforce the contract if there has been part performance (g) from which the party seeking to resist the enforcement has derived a benefit, and the circumstances are such that the plaintiff cannot be compensated fully otherwise than by specific performance (h).

33. When there is fraud on the part of the defendant, objection on the ground of uncertainty is not allowed to prevail (i).

34. The court does not as a rule enforce specific performance of an agreement unless its terms are certain and unambiguous, so that the obligations of the parties are clearly ascertained (k). Specific performance is, however, granted when there is such a degree of certainty as is reasonably required in the circumstances (l), or the original uncertainty has been removed by a subsequent election (m), or by a course of dealing between the parties (n), or by terms reasonably implied in law (o). SECT. 2. "et cetera" does not render a contract too uncertain if it is sufficiently plain from the context what is included in the phrase (p).
Contract not Sufficiently Certain.

How uncertainty as to subject-matter may arise.

SUB-SECT. 3.—Uncertainty as to Subject-matter.

35. The incompleteness of the contract may be in regard to the identification of the subject-matter, and may in such case arise either where the subject-matter was not finally determined at the date of the contract but was left to be ascertained thereafter, or where the subject-matter, although determined at the date of the contract, was not described sufficiently for identification (q).

How defect may be cured.

36. In the former case the defect may be cured if the subject-matter is ascertained by the proper party prior to the action being brought (r).

In the latter case the defect may be cured if the identification of the subject-matter can be completed by admissible extrinsic evidence (s).

In some cases the court acts on the maxim id certum est quod certum reddi potest (t). The description must be such as to enable the court to ascertain what the parties intended to be the subject of their contract, and, if this cannot be done, specific performance is refused (a).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Uncertainty as to Parties.

What is sufficient description.

37. The incompleteness of the contract may be in regard to the identification of the parties. Such incompleteness is a bar

P. 9); "your wool" (Macdonald v. Longbottom (1859), 1 E. & E. 977); see Shardlow v. Cotterell (1881), 20 Ch. D. 90, C. A.; compare Ogilvie v. Foljambe (1817), 3 Mer. 53; *McMurray v. to performance wherever the law requires a written memorandum or contract (b), unless the description or reference is such as to enable the parties to be identified (c). The contract of an agent is treated for this purpose as the contract of his principal, and though the name of the latter does not appear in the writing his identity may be proved by parol evidence (d). A description of a party simply as the executor, the mortgagee, or trustee is sufficient, since parol evidence enables it to be ascertained who fills the capacity described (e); and similarly it is sufficient if the vendor is described as the owner or proprietor of the property (f).

SECT. 2.
Contract
not Sufficiently Certain.

It is not, however, enough to refer simply to the vendor, since that leaves the identity purely to parol evidence if there is nothing in the memorandum to show who the vendor is (g); but, even in such a case, the terms of the contract may contain a sufficient description, as where the party is described as vendor and the conditions of sale show that the vendor is in possession (h).

SUB-SECT. 5.—Uncertainty as to Price.

38. The price is a material term in every contract of sale, and, unless the price is ascertained by the contract, or machinery is provided for its ascertainment, the contract is incomplete and cannot be enforced (i); thus, where a vendor agrees to sell to a purchaser for a named sum less than any other purchaser will give, the price is neither ascertained nor ascertainable, and there is no contract capable of enforcement (k).

39. The contract, while not fixing a price, may define how the price is to be ascertained, or may provide for a fair price. In the former case there is no enforceable contract until the price has been sidiary to principal purpose of contra

fixed in accordance with the mode of ascertainment provided (l), as, for example, by the valuation of named persons (m), since the court does not order performance of a contract at a price still to be fixed (n).

If valuers have to be appointed by the parties, and one party refuses to appoint, the contract remains incomplete (o); the court cannot appoint valuers in the party's stead (p). Similarly, the contract cannot be enforced if the valuers appointed refuse to act or fail to give a valid valuation (q), although, if the failure to act or to give a valuation is due to the interference of one party, an action may lie for damages (r) or an injunction may be granted against such interference (s). In the same way, there is no enforceable contract if a named valuer has been incapable of acting (t), though the court has in certain cases interfered to supply the defect (a).

40. Where the thing to be valued is subsidiary to the main purpose of the contract, the court treats the mode of valuation as non-essential, and the contract as one for sale at a fair price (b), as, for example, in the case of a provision for the valuation of furniture (c), or of plant and machinery (d); similarly, where partnership articles provide for a valuation when the partnership expires, the particular mode may be treated as non-essential, and the court provides for the fixing of a reasonable value (e).

SUB-SECT. 6.—Material Terms Omitted.

SECT. 2.

Contract
not Sufficiently Certain.Absence of material terms.Examples of materiality.

41. Apart from questions relating to the subject-matter, the parties, and the price, the absence of other material terms renders a contract unenforceable (f), unless they can be supplied by the court either by construction or inference or implication of law (g). The question as to what terms are material in any contract depends on the nature of the contract.

The court may, on the ground of absence of material terms, refuse to enforce contracts in the following circumstances: when a contract providing for an increase of rent does not state from what time it is to commence (h); when a contract does not define the length of the term agreed to be granted (i); when a contract for a lease for lives does not ascertain what are the lives (k); when an agreement for a partnership is silent as to the capital (l); when the parties differ as to what expenses are to be borne by the vendor (m); or when an auctioneer's receipt relied on as a contract does not refer to the conditions of the sale (n). Where a material term of a contract is left to future agreement, the contract is unenforceable until that term has been agreed (o); and, where a material term is left to the decision of a third person, specific performance of the contract is not granted while such decision is lacking (p).

42. In the absence of express agreement, however, the law in many cases makes good the defect by supplying terms by implication or inference: thus, a contract to sell a house is prima facie construed as a contract to sell the fee simple (q), while a similar contract may, by reason of its other terms, be construed as a contract to sell the vendor's interest (r). In a contract for the sale of land, a condition is implied for a good title and for delivery up of the deeds or satisfactory proof of their contents and loss (s). Such conditions may, however, be waived (t), or may be rebutted by the express terms of the contract (a), or by notice (b).

Inference assisted by part performance.

43. In cases where a contract is prima facie incomplete, the court may be more ready to infer a term so as to make the contract complete and enforceable if there has been part performance (c) on the faith of the contract (d); but where a contract is, on the face of it, complete, parol evidence is not, as a rule, admitted to prove the exclusion of some material term (e).

The statutory requirements.

44. By s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds (f) it is provided that no action shall be brought to charge any person on a contract or sale of any lands, tenements or hereditaments, or any interest in or concerning them, unless the agreement upon which the action is brought or some memorandum or note thereof shall be in writing and signed by the party to be charged or some other person thereunto lawfully authorised by him. The same provision also applies to certain other contracts (g); and a similar provision applies to any contract for the sale of goods of the value of £10 or upwards (h).

The former statutory provision (i) is a bar to an action for specific performance in the case of any contract coming within its terms, unless the requirements of the statute have been complied with (k), or unless those conditions exist which equity has recognised as taking the case out of the statute (l).

SECT. 3.
Statute of Frauds not Complied with.

The statute
as a defence.

45. The statute (i) relates to the mode of proving the contract, and not to the existence of the contract (m); and it is enough if a note or memorandum satisfying its terms is in existence before action brought (n). Any note or memorandum is enough so long as it contains the terms of a concluded contract (o), even though it shows that the preparation of a formal contract is contemplated (p), and even though it consists of a number of documents, provided there is sufficient evidence of their interconnection (q). The note or memorandum need only be signed by the party to be charged, that is, the defendant (r) or his agent (s); it is immaterial for what purpose it was actually brought into existence (t), nor does the place or form of the signature matter if in fact it authenticates the document as a whole (u).

(p) The question is whether the parties have arrived at a complete agreement which simply requires formal expression, or whether they have only arrived at agreement as to some terms leaving others to be settled in the formal agreement, or are only in the stage of treaty pending a final and formal agreement. SECT. 3.

Frauds not Complied with.Circumstances
out of statute.SUB-SECT. 2.—Exceptions.(i.) In General.

46. Courts of equity have treated certain circumstances as taking a case out of the operation of the Statute of Frauds (a), and have accordingly in such circumstances granted relief by specific performance, notwithstanding the absence of a sufficient note or memorandum. The fact that the sale is by order of the court may be sufficient to take the case out of the statute (b). The other circumstances sufficient for this purpose fall under the general heads of (1) fraud (c); (2) part performance (d); and (3) admission in the pleadings (e).

(ii.) *Fraud.*The statute not to be used as an instrument of fraud.Enforcement of collateral
terms.

47. It has been held that the Statute of Frauds (f) may not be used as an instrument of fraud (g), and that it cannot be relied on to prevent proof of a fraud (h). On this principle evidence has been admitted of a parol collateral contract on the faith of which the written contract was entered into, and on proof of such parol contract a plaintiff seeking to enforce the written agreement has been refused specific performance thereof, or has been granted specific performance only subject to the terms of the collateral agreement (i). Similarly, where a breach of the collateral parol agreement would have amounted to fraud, a plaintiff seeking to enforce it, has obtained specific performance of its terms (j). Fraud, however, within the above rule is not established merely by proving that the party promised to sign a record of the agreement and broke that promise (k), though a plea that the defendant fraudulently prevented the writing coming into existence may avail (l).

(iii.) Part Performance.

48. Part performance of a parol contract by one party may debar the other party from setting up the Statute of Frauds (m) in answer to a claim for specific performance, on the ground that such part performance raises an equity against the party who has allowed it to take place on the faith of there being a contract, and prevents that party from denying that the contract exists (n). The part performance accordingly must be by the party seeking to enforce the parol agreement (o).

49. Acts of part performance can only be relied upon for this purpose if they are such as to be referable to no other title than such a contract as is alleged (p). Acts which are ambiguous in this respect as being consistent with some other title than such contract will not suffice (q). Thus, possession by a tenant who obtained possession under a previously existing lease does not constitute part performance in respect of an alleged agreement to grant a renewal of that lease, since the possession may be referred to the tenancy under that lease (r), and the same principle applies to acts of reconstruction or repair by a tenant in possession (a). If, however, the acts of part performance are referable to some contract, and are consistent with the contract alleged, evidence is admissible as to the precise terms of the particular contract which is alleged (b). In effect; the necessity of writing is dispensed with, and the court is entitled to find what the parties have actually agreed, although the terms of the agreement go beyond those to which the acts of part performance in themselves point (c).

50. The acts of part performance must, in addition, be of such a nature and done in such circumstances as render it a fraud by the other party to refuse performance of the contract (d). Hence, the other party must have been aware that they were being done on the faith of the existence of a contract (e); and, where the party against whom it is sought to enforce the contract is not the party with whom the contract is made, it must be shown that he, with knowledge of the contract, permitted the acts of part performance to be done, as, for example, where it is sought to enforce against a remainderman a parol contract made with the tenant for life (f).

Acts cannot be relied on as part performance if they are not the acts of the parties to the contract, as, for instance, acts done by valuers with a view to a valuation (g); and it appears that no

Kingsbury Urban Council*, [1912] 2 Ch. 452, per NEVILLE, J., at p. 465 (where, although the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 4, would not, owing to acts of part performance, have been a valid defence, it was held that the contract in question was not binding owing to non-compliance with the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 174; see titles HIGHWAYS, STREETS, AND BRIDGES, Vol. XVI., p. 112; LOCAL GOVERNMENT, Vol. XIX., p. 268).

equity would arise in favour of a party who has at his command an alternative (h) and equivalent method which renders unnecessary the interference of the court (i).

51. The doctrine of part performance does not extend to contracts which the Court of Chancery would not have enforced even if they had been in writing (k); thus, it does not apply to a contract for work and labour (l), or for personal service extending over a period exceeding a year (m), or of guarantee (n). It has been said that the doctrine is limited to cases concerning land (o); but this opinion has been treated as too narrow (p), and the exact limit of the doctrine is somewhat doubtful (q). It is clear that for the doctrine to apply there must be a completed contract, which, apart from the question of writing, is obligatory on the parties and which is not incomplete (r) or matter of mere honourable engagement (a).

52. Of the particular acts which have been held to constitute part performance, that most commonly considered has been the possession of land. Such possession must be the acknowledged possession by a stranger of another's land (b), and only explicable on the ground of a contract either of sale or lease (c), or other analogous contract (d), such as a contract of marriage (e) or a family arrangement (f).

Further, in many cases the expenditure of money by one party on the improvement and alteration of property, if done with the cognisance of the other party to the contract, has been held to amount to part performance (g). A vendor cannot, however, as against the purchaser, insist on the fact that the purchaser has paid part of the purchase price, since, should the purchaser refuse to complete, the fact of the part payment would in itself be no fraud on the vendor (h).

So, also, where a lessee pays for certain alterations and additions to premises made by the lessor in accordance with the terms of the contract, specific performance is decreed (Waller v. Vigurs (1853), 2 W. R. 51).

(h) Buckmaster v. Harrop (1802), 7 Ves. 341, 345.

So also the payment in whole or in part of the purchase-money is not an act of part performance which entitles the purchaser to enforce a parol contract (i), though payment of an increased rent has been held sufficient part performance of an oral agreement to grant a lease for a term (k). Payment of auction duty is not part performance of a contract of sale (l).

Marriage by itself is not part performance of a contract in consideration of marriage, since to hold so would be diametrically contrary to the provisions of the Statute of Frauds (m) in respect of such contracts (n), but there may be acts, independently of the marriage itself, which constitute part performance in respect of such a contract (o); and it has been held that cohabitation may be a sufficient part performance (p).

(iv.) Admission in Pleading.

55. A case coming within the Statute of Frauds (r) is taken out of the statute if the party whom it is sought to charge does not by his pleading deny the existence of the contract in fact and further expressly plead that the statute has not been complied with. A failure to deny that the contract was in fact made is, under the rules of pleading, equivalent to an admission of its existence (s).

SECT. 4.—Illegality of Contract.

Illegality as a bar to relief.

56. The court does not interfere directly to enforce an illegal contract by specific performance (t), any more than it assists indirectly to enforce it either by awarding damages or compensation, or ordering an account of profits among the parties interested (a).

Enforcement
transactions.

57. Certain collateral transactions may, however, be enforced, though they concern an original transaction tainted with illegality; for instance, a cestui que trust can enforce performance of a trust against the trustee, even though the transaction in respect of which the money or property was transferred to the trustee was unlawful, and could not have been enforced by the cestui que trust against the person who so transferred to the trustee (b).

Sufficiency of evidence.

58. There are conflicting opinions on the question whether the court in refusing to grant relief must be satisfied of actual illegality (c), or whether it is not enough that there should be reasonable ground for contending that the transaction is unlawful (d).

Transaction ultra vires.

59. On similar principles, where the defendant is a company or corporation with limited powers, a defence that the transaction sought to be enforced is ultra vires is, if established, a bar to specific performance (e).

SECT. 5.—*Oppressiveness of Contract.*SECT. 5.
Oppressive-
ness of Contract.

60. The discretion of the court to grant specific performance is not exercised if the contract is not "equal and fair" (f). In such a case, even though no fraud such as to justify rescission is alleged, the court does not interfere to enforce the contract (g).

Contract not equal and fair.

61. As a rule, the question of the unfairness of the contract must be determined as at its date (h). For instance, a family arrangement or other compromise is fair if entered into by both parties, who have equal knowledge and means of knowledge, and who contract in view of some future and uncertain event or the future ascertainment of facts past but unknown (i). That the contingency turns out adversely to one party does not render the contract unfair (a). Where, however, the actual facts are such as to render what is sold worthless, and are known to one party but not to the other, the contract, though expressly dealing with an uncertainty, will not be enforced (b); and, if the contingency is outside the contemplation of the parties, and different in kind and degree from such uncertainty as the parties contemplated, the court refuses specific performance (c).

which unfairness must be determined.

Though unfairness is to be judged as a rule as at the date of the contract, unfairness arising at a subsequent date may be material in this respect, as, for instance, unfairness or impropriety in the valuation of a third party, where under the contract the price is to be fixed by such valuation (d).

SECT. 5.

Oppressive-
ness of Contract.Suppression of fact.Relationship of the parties.

62. Unfairness may consist in such suppression of fact as does not, in the opinion of the court, amount to fraud or misrepresentation (e), such as the conduct of a lessee in obtaining the renewal of a lease while suppressing the fact that the person on whose life the old lease depended was in extremis (f).

63. Again, there may be circumstances in the position or mental state of the party against whom specific performance is sought, such as to render it inequitable that he should be forced by the court to perform his contract, such as, for instance, intoxication (g), intimidation and duress (h), mental weakness not amounting to insanity (i), distress (k), illiteracy, want of advice (l), or similar circumstances appearing inconsistent with intelligent consent (m). In all such cases it need not be shown that the plaintiff was guilty of intentional unfairness (n).

Unfairness to third parties.

64. Another species of unfairness which may stay the hand of the court is that the contract, if enforced, would be injurious to impropriety on the part of the plaintiff (a). Such hardship may be either obvious on the face of the contract, or more or less latent and due to collateral matters: the latter case leads more readily to the court's giving effect to the hardship and refusing performance.

66. As a general rule hardship, to operate as a ground of defence, must be such as existed at the time of the contract, and not such as has arisen subsequently from a change of circumstances; thus the court may refuse to enforce an award on a submission to arbitration if the submission involves hardship (b), but not on the ground of mere hardship and unreasonableness in the award itself (c): so a covenant to renew a sub-lease without fine may be enforced though the terms of the renewal of the head lease are changed and made more onerous (d). In some cases, however, hardship subsequently arising may be treated as a ground for refusing specific performance (e). This result generally follows if the change of conditions, involving hardship to the defendant, has resulted from the act of the plaintiff (f), especially if the plaintiff's conduct operated as something in the nature of a trap (g).

67. Hardship which flows from the conduct of the defendant (h), or a hardship which simply results to the defendant because the purpose he had in view has failed (i), or because his speculation has proved unfortunate to him (k), cannot be set up by way of defence. Where the defendant is a company the court cannot consider that performance may involve hardship to individual members as distinguished from the company (l).

68. The fact that performance would expose the defendant to forfeiture constitutes such hardship as induces the court to refuse performance, at least if the forfeiture would clearly result (m). A mere possibility is not enough, and forfeiture not resulting directly from performance of the contract, but proximately caused by other acts of the defendant, constitutes no defence (n).

SECT. 5.
Oppressive-
Contract.

Forfeiture caused by performance.

69. In some cases a plaintiff is not granted specific performance except on certain terms imposed to avoid hardships which otherwise would result to the defendant; thus, a vendor liable to covenants in respect of the land can compel the purchaser to elect either to rescind the contract or to execute an indemnity against such covenants as a term of specific performance (o).

Relief granted on terms to prevent hardship.

70. The following are examples of circumstances in which the court is unwilling, on the ground of hardship, to enforce contracts: where there is no right of way to the land sold (p); where the property is, without the knowledge of either vendor or purchaser, being used by the tenant as a disorderly house (q); where the vendors have personally agreed to discharge the estate from incumbrances, and some of them are trustees (r); where trustees have sold in circumstances which would constitute a breach of trust (s); where a mortgagee who has foreclosed and intended to sell as absolute owner has by inadvertence purported to sell as a mortgagee with a power of sale (t).

consideration is not in itself a ground for resisting specific performance unless it is so gross as to amount to conclusive evidence of fraud (b), or there are other circumstances which, combined with the inadequacy, will induce the court not to enforce the contract (c). The same principle seems now to apply to sales of reversions (d).

Whenever the question of inadequacy of consideration is raised it must be determined as at the date of the contract, and not in the light of subsequent events (e).

• It is further clear that the court is not debarred from considering the question of inadequacy simply by reason of the fact that the consideration has been determined by a valuer to whom the parties have referred it (f).

Callaghan* (1841), 8 Cl. & Fin. 374, H. L. (transaction held to be in nature of a gift, not a sale). As regards transactions with a tenant for life carried out in pursuance of statutory powers, see title SETTLEMENTS, Vol. XXV., p. 669.

(d) The Sales of Reversions Act, 1867 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 4), provides that no purchase, made bonâ fide and without fraud or unfair dealing, of any reversionary interest in real or personal estate shall be refused or set aside merely on the ground of undervalue. The statute in terms refers to cases of rescission, but the same principle seems necessarily to apply to cases of specific performance. The statute leaves unaffected the jurisdiction of the court to relieve against catching bargains with infants and expectant heirs; see titles EQUITY, Vol. XIII., pp. 20, 21; FRAUDULENT AND VOIDABLE CONVEYANCES, Vol. XV., pp. 111, 112; and see Fry on Specific Performance, 5th ed., p. 230; *Kendall v. misrepresentation, whether wilful (that is, fraudulent) or innocent, is a bar to the enforcement of the contract induced thereby (h), and parol evidence is admissible to prove such misrepresentation (a). Even when the misrepresentation relates to part only of the contract it operates on the entire contract, and performance is not compelled, even with compensation, against the defendant's will (b), though, should the defendant consent, specific performance with compensation in respect of the matter which is the subject of the misrepresentation is decreed (c). That the party making the misrepresentation believed it to be true is not material in an action of this nature, since it would be inequitable to allow a party to enforce performance of a contract obtained by a representation which he admits to be incorrect (d); nor is it material for this purpose whether the representation was made by the party or his agent, or whether, if made by the agent, it was within that agent's actual authority, since it would be inequitable in any case for the party to profit by his agent's misstatement (e).

(3) The other party must in fact have been induced to contract by reason of the representation (h), but it is not necessary that it should be the sole inducement (i). If the party to whom the representation was made in fact relied upon it, it is immaterial that he had the means of checking the accuracy of the representation, or had other means of knowledge (k). The vagueness of the representation is material in considering whether or not the party to whom it was made was induced by it; there must be a statement of fact; a mere opinion or vague commendation is not sufficient (l). If, however, the party to whom the Land and House Property Corporation* (1884), 28 Ch. D. 7, C. A.; Arnison v. Smith (1889), 41 Ch. D. 348, 369, C. A. Whether or not the misrepresentation actually operated as an inducement is a question of fact. In Redgrave v. Hurd, supra, JESSEL, M.R., said that if the representation were material, its operation was an inference of law; this seems to go too far, though the materiality would constitute strong evidence of inducement.

Twiss*, [1896] A. C. 273; see title MISREPRESENTATION AND FRAUD, Vol. XX., p. 726. But in Attwood v. Small, supra, it was held that reliance was not placed on the representation; see also Jennings v. Broughton (1854), 5 De G. M. & G. 126, C. A.; Aberaman Ironworks v. Wickens (1868), 4 Ch. App. 101, reversing S. C. (1868), L. R. 5 Eq. 485; Farebrother v. Gibson (1857), 1 De G. & J. 602, C. A.; Haywood v. Cope (1858), 25 Beav. 140; Jefferys v. Fairs (1876), 4 Ch. D. 448; Lowndes v. Lane (1789), 2 Cox, Eq. Cas. 363. Much depends in deciding such questions on the nature of the subject-matter and the relative knowledge of the parties; see Clapham v. Shillito (1844), 7 Beav. 146, per Lord LANGDALE, M.R., at pp. 149, 150; compare Clarke v. Mackintosh, Mackintosh v. Clarke (1862), 7 L. T. 558; Colby v. Gadsden (1867), 17 L. T. 97.

(l) Here, again, the respective knowledge of the parties may be important (see Smith v. Land and House Property Corporation, supra), but it is otherwise if the statement is so ambiguous as to mislead (see Martin v. Cotter (1846), 3 Jo. & Lat. 496, 507), or is a statement of a definite fact (Higgins v. Samels (1862), 2 John. & H. 460). As instances of vague commendation, see Jennings v. Broughton, supra; Trower v. Newcome (1813), 3 Mer. 704; Scott v. Hanson (1826), 1 Sim. 13; Dimmock v. Hallett (1866), 2 Ch. App.

representation was made knew, when it was made, that it was incorrect, he cannot resist specific performance on the ground of misrepresentation (m); and the same result follows if, with knowledge of the incorrectness of the statement, he has continued to proceed on the footing of the contract (n).

(4) The statement must, it seems, be one of fact and not of law (o); but, should the representation be matter of mixed fact and law, as is often the case in regard to matters of title, the defence prevails (p).

(5) The representation must be as to a matter material to the contract (q).

Actual knowledge of the incorrectness must be shown; see Drysdale v. Mace (1854), 2 Sm. & G. 225, 230; Jones v. Rimmer (1880), 14 Ch. D. 588, C. A.; Price v. Macaulay (1852), 2 De G. Short*, supra, it was contended, without success, that a general statement inconsistent with the particular representation ought to have put the party on inquiry; see Reynell v. Sprye (1852), 1 De G. M. & G. 660, 710, C. A., where the party making the representation was held to be bound by it though he advised the other party to seek independent advice; Van v. Corpe (1834), 3 My. & K. 269, where the doctrine that the purchaser of a lease has implied notice of the covenants did not nullify a misrepresentation by the vendor; compare Flight v. Barton (1832), 3 My. & K. 282 (see title LANDLORD AND TENANT, Vol. XVIII., p. 410); Pope v. Garland (1841), 4 Y. & C. (ex.) 394 (see title SALE OF LAND, Vol. XXV., p. 304). In Nelson v. Stocker (1859), 4 De G. & J. 458, C. A., it was held that a principal could not rely on a misstatement made to his agent of the falsity of which he, though not the agent, was aware.

(o) The point does not appear to have been decided; it has been decided to the above effect in actions for rescission or for making good a representation in Beattie v. Ebbury (Lord) (1874), L. R. 7 H. L. 102; Legge v. Croker (1811), 1 Ball & B. 506; see title MISREPRESENTATION AND FRAUD, Vol. XX., p. 669; compare *Wauton v. But in other cases representations as to title were held not to constitute a defence; see, for instance, Legge v. Croker, supra; Hume v. Pocock (1866), 1 Ch. App. 379; Brownlie v. Campbell (1880), 5 App. Cas. 925, 937; see also Wilde v. Gibson (1848), 1 H. L. Cas. 605 (rescission of executed conveyance); compare Cresswell v. Jeffreys (1912), 29 T. L. R. 90, C. A. Misrepresentation, deception or fraudulent intention :

Wilful
 silence or suppression.

74. The question whether there has been wilful deception or fraudulent intent is for present purposes mainly material if the ground of complaint is not positive misstatement, but silence or suppression. Mere silence, where there is no duty to disclose or no such partial disclosure as to render the silence deceptive, is no ground of defence to a claim for specific performance (r). Silence may, however, be a ground of defence if it involves a breach of a duty to disclose, as in the case of certain fiduciary relationships (s) and certain contracts which from their nature are held to impose a duty to make disclosure (a), or by reason of an antecedent wrong committed by one party against the other party in relation to the subject-matter of the contract (b). Silence is also a ground of defence if one party, having during the progress of the negotiations made certain statements and subsequently discovered their falsity, allows the other party to enter into the contract on the faith of those statements without attempting to correct them (c). A statement, true as far as it goes, may be intentionally misleading by reason of what it omits (d); and there may be fraud where

R. 73; Percival v. Wright, [1902] 2 Ch. 421. But Ellard v. Llandaff (Lord) (1810), 1 Ball & B. 241, seems to be a case where silence not fraudulent prevented specific performance on the ground that enforcement would be unfair; see Robinson v. Wall (1847), 2 Ph. 372, per Lord COTTENHAM, L.C.; see also title MISREPRESENTATION AND FRAUD, Vol. XX., pp. 684, 685; and compare ibid., p. 681.

Similarly, there is an obligation on a vendor to disclose a latent defect known to himself (Carlish v. Salt, [1906] 1 Ch. 335 (sale of land); Horsfall v. Thomas (1862), 1 H. & C. 90 (sale of chattel)); see titles SALE OF GOODS, Vol. XXV., p. 157; SALE OF LAND, Vol. XXV., pp. 299, 302, 405.

Similarly, purchasers have been debarred from enforcing their contracts by a slight suggestion of what was false coupled with silence as to the rest; see Turner v. Harvey (1821), Jac. 169, 178; Walters v. Morgan (1861), 3 De G. F. & J. 718, 723, 724; Davies v. Cooper (1840), 5 My. & Cr. 270; Davis v. Abraham (1857), 5 W. R. 465.

SECT. 6.
Misrepresentation, Fraud, and Mistake.

75. A special case of fraud is the employment of a "puffer" at a sale by auction of land or goods. In the absence of a special reservation by the seller of a right to bid, any such employment renders the contract unenforceable (g).

76. It seems that the fraud of a third party, even without the privity of the plaintiff, renders the contract unenforceable if it was intended to operate, and did operate, as matter of inducement to the contract (h).

Fraud of

77. The fact that performance would involve a fraud on the public may also be a ground for refusing specific performance (i).

80. Where the error is that of the defendant only it may be an error contributed to by the plaintiff (n), in which case the plaintiff cannot enforce the contract (o).

81. The error of the defendant may, on the other hand, be one to which the plaintiff did not contribute (p). In this case the contract is not enforced if the mistake of the defendant was due to some ambiguity (q), or if there was some misconception on the part of an agent (r), or some special circumstances rendering the mistake of the defendant excusable (s), or where the plaintiff must have known of the defendant's mistake (t). If, however, the defendant cannot rely on some such excuse as the foregoing, and if the mistake is simply the result of his own carelessness, he is not allowed to evade performance simply by alleging that he made a mistake (u).

82. Where the mistake is that of the defendant only, the court may give the plaintiff the option of having his action dismissed or of having specific performance in the terms of the contract as understood by the defendant (w).

So the effect of mistake may be to lead the court to refuse specific performance altogether, or to grant it solely if the plaintiff will accept performance in the terms of the contract as understood by the defendant (a).

SECT. 6.
Misrepresentation, Fraud, and Mistake.
Proof.

83. It is to be noted that mistake, at least if set up by the defendant, may be proved by parol evidence, though the admission of such evidence may appear contrary to the Statute of Frauds (b).

(ii.) Mistake in the Expression of Consent.

84. The fact that there has been a mistake in the reduction into writing of a previous parol contract is a ground for refusing specific performance of the written contract (c); but the evidence with regard to the parol agreement must be very clear (d). In such a case the court may also either enforce the contract according to its original terms as agreed by parol (e), or put the plaintiff to his choice either to have the contract enforced as altered in accordance with the parol agreement or the claim dismissed (f). Each case depends on its special circumstances (g).

Refusal of relief or enforcement with variation.

85. With regard to the question whether a mistake of law is a ground on which the court should act or refuse to act, it may be taken as a rule that mistakes as to the general law, as, for example, the construction of a contract, do not affect the rights of the parties (h), while, on the other hand, mistakes as to private rights which indeed may involve the application of general principles of law to the subject-matter may be such as afford a defence to an action for specific performance (i).

86. Mistake may bring into effect the equitable jurisdiction of the court to rectify a written contract where the parties, having mutually agreed on the terms, have by common mistake failed to express these terms with accuracy in the written contract (k). Where the court has ordered rectification of a contract on this ground, it can in the same action order specific performance of the contract as rectified, at all events in cases where the Statute of Frauds (l) is not a bar (m).

SECT. 7.—Defects in Subject-matter of Contract.

Defect apart from fraud.

87. The existence of a defect in the subject-matter of the contract is in certain cases, apart from any question of fraud (n) or misrepresentation (o), a ground for refusing specific performance (p).

The defect
must be latent.

88. The defect relied on as a defence to the claim must be latent (q), that is, not obvious on reasonable examination (r). It may consist either in the physical nature of the subject-matter of the contract (s), or in the fact that the subject-matter is subject to unusual or onerous covenants or circumstances (t). On the same principles any substantial variation between the description in the contract and the subject-matter of the contract may be set up in answer to the claim for specific performance, even though the variation is beneficial to the defendant rather than in the nature of a defect (a).

SECT. 7.
Defects in Subject-matter of Contract.

89. The defect or variation must be essential (b). A defect cannot be relied on if there is a provision in the contract excluding reliance on defects, as when the sale is "with all faults" (c), or if the contract is so framed as in terms to leave uncertain the matter complained of (d); nor, as a rule, can a defect be relied on in reply to a claim for specific performance if, at the date of the contract, its existence was unknown to the plaintiff as well as to the defendant (e).

The defect
must be essential and known to plaintiff.

(s) As in Dyer v. Hargrave, Hargrave v. Dyer (1805), 10 Ves. 505.

(t) As, for instance, the sale of leaseholds where the vendor is silent as to unusual and onerous covenants (Hampshire v. Wickens (1878), 7 Ch. D. 555; Re Lander and Bagley's Contract, [1892] 3 Ch. 41; Molyneux v. Hawtrey, [1903] 2 K. B. 487, C. A.), unless the purchaser ought himself to have ascertained their existence (Reeve v. Berridge (1888), 20 Q. B. D. 523, C. A.; Re White and Smith's Contract, [1896] 1 Ch. 637), since it is the vendor's duty in a case relating to real estate to disclose any material defect not ascertainable in the ordinary course by the purchaser (Carlisk v. Salt, [1906] 1 Ch. 335; Re Haedicke and Lipski's Contract, [1901] 2 Ch. 666; see title SALE OF LAND, Vol. XXV., pp. 297 et seq.; see also *Stevens v. In such cases, however serious and latent the defect, the purchaser is bound, unless it has been concealed from him by some positive act (Baglehole v. Walters, supra; Schneider v. Heath (1813), 3 Camp. 506), or has been the subject of fraudulent misrepresentation (see pp. 42 et seq., ante), or constitutes a breach of an express warranty: compare Early v. Garret (1829), 9 B. & C. 928; and see titles CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 520, 521; MISREPRESENTATION AND FRAUD, Vol. XX., pp. 682, 684, 685; SALE OF GOODS, Vol. XXV., pp. 149, 150; SALE OF LAND, Vol. XXV., pp. 298, 299.

(d) See, for instance, Monro v. Taylor (1852), 3 Mac. & G. 713 (property sold generally as freehold and leasehold, exact boundaries between the two tenures unascertainable); distinguish Davis v. Shepherd (1866), 1 Ch. App. 410.

C., [1899] 1 Ch. 879, where specific performance was refused of a sale of freeholds, which the lessee in fact used as a brothel, though the vendor was ignorant of it; the purchaser might have become subject to criminal proceedings; and see title SALE OF LAND, Vol. XXV., p. 298.

tions on Plaintiff's Part.

Failure to tract.

Relief only

Condition

SECT. 8.—Non-performance of Conditions on Plaintiff's Part.

SUB-SECT. 1.—In General.

90. A plaintiff seeking to enforce a contract must show that all conditions precedent have been fulfilled and that he has performed, or been ready and willing to perform, all the terms which ought to have been performed by him, and also that he is ready and willing to perform all future obligations under the contract (f); subject to certain exceptions to be mentioned (g), any failure on his part bars his claim to specific performance (h).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Conditions Precedent.

91. The plaintiff must show performance or fulfilment of conditions precedent (i), whether to be performed by him or not, since until such performance or fulfilment the contract has not become absolute and the plaintiff is not entitled to enforce it (k). As illustrations of such conditions the following may be cited:—a condition to the taking of the lease of a public-house that the lessor should use his best endeavours to obtain a licence and that a licence should be obtained (l); a condition, in the case of a covenant to renew a lease, that repairing covenants should have been performed (m).

To be within the above rule a condition need not be express, but may be implied from the terms of the contract; thus, where a contract is to grant a lease to a nominee to be named by the plaintiff, his (f) Compare Measures Brothers, Ltd. v. Measures, [1910] 2 Ch. 248, C. A.; General Bill Posting Co., Ltd. v. Atkinson, [1909] A. C. 118; and see Statford v. Aldborough (Earl) (1786), 1 Ridg. Parl. Cas. 287; Acraman v. Price, Davies v. Price (1876), 18 W. R. 540. Repudiation by the defendant does not excuse the plaintiff from showing performance or readiness to perform on his part; see Ellis v. Rogers (1884), 50 L. T. 660 (building lease).

(g) See pp. 56, 58, post.

(h) Hooper v. Bromet (1904), 90 L. T. 234, C. A. There is an apparent exception in cases where the separate parts of an agreement are severable and in truth amount to separate contracts: in such cases, failure by the plaintiff to fulfil conditions as to one part does not bar his claim for performance of a separate part, in respect of which he has fulfilled his obligations; see Wilkinson v. Clements (1872), 8 Ch. App. 96 (building agreement). As a rule, however, a contract must be specifically performed as a whole, or the court will entirely refuse to enforce it; see Ford v. Stuart (1852), 15 Beav. 493 (mortgage and settlement); Wood v. Rowe (1820), 2 Bli. 595, H. L. (agreement to settle litigation).

(i) As to conditions precedent generally, see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 433 et seq.; see also title LANDLORD AND TENANT, Vol. XVIII., pp. 379, 380.

(k) Scott v. Liverpool Corporation (1858), 1 Giff. 216; affirmed 3 De G. & J. 334; Abbot v. Blair (1860), 8 W. R. 672; Douglas v. Sidmouth Railway and Harbour Co. (1866), 14 W. R. 361; compare Regent's Canal Co. v. Ware (1857), 23 Beav. 575, 586.

(l) Modlen v. Snowball (1861), 29 Beav. 641; affirmed 4 De F. & J. 143. A different principle applies in the case of an existing licence where the contract contains no express condition (Tadcaster Tower Brewery Co. v. Wilson, [1897] 1 Ch. 705; compare Re Ward and Jordan's Contract, [1902] 1 L. R. 73).

(m) Bastin v. Bidwell (1881), 18 Ch. D. 238; Greville v. Parker, [1910] A. C. 335, P. C. In Starkey v. Barton, [1909] 1 Ch. 284, no default was committed.

naming a nominee is a condition precedent (n): so also contracts relating to the purchase of lands and payment of compensation by railway companies may be treated as conditional on the construction of the line (o).

SECT. 8.
Non-Performance of Conditions on Plaintiff's Part.

92. Non-performance of a condition precedent does not constitute a defence if performance has been waived by the party entitled to require it (p), provided the condition is solely for that party's benefit (q) and has been waived intentionally and with full knowledge (r).

Waiver by defendant.

93. A particular case in which non-performance of a condition by the plaintiff is a bar to his action is where he is a vendor of land suing for specific performance of the contract, but is unable to prove a good title (s). It is only here necessary to refer to the special rules adopted by the court in regard to cases where, while not deciding that the title is bad, the court considers that the title is doubtful, and on that ground ought not to be enforced upon an unwilling purchaser (t).

Sale of land: proof of title.

It is difficult to define with precision what degree of doubt as to the title will lead the court to refuse specific performance (a). The following rules, however, may be suggested (b):—

Doubtful title as a cause of refusal of relief.

(1) Specific performance is refused when there is a probability of Probable litigation.

Northumberland (Duke)* (1820), 1 Jac. & W. 559, 568; Willcox v. Bellaers (1823), Turn. & R. 491. The practical justification of the rule is that the decision of the court in an action of specific performance would not bind third parties not present before the court; see Osborne to Rowlett (1880), 13 Ch. D. 774, per JESSEL, M.R., at p. 781; Glass v. Richardson (1852), 9 Hare, 698, per TURNER, V.-C., at p. 701; compare Re Reilly and Brady's Contract, [1910] 1 I. R. 258.

(a) As illustrating the difficulties felt by the court, see Jervoise v. Northumberland (Duke), supra; Sheffield v. Mulgrave (Lord), supra; litigation owing to the chance of adverse claims by third parties against the purchaser, if this probability is great, and especially if the decision of such claims depends on disputed issues of fact (c). If, however, the probability of litigation against the purchaser is not great, the court enforces the contract (d).

(2) The existence of a decision of a court of co-ordinate jurisdiction which the court thinks wrong leads the court to refuse performance both where such decision is adverse to the title and where it is in favour of it (e). In the case of a decision of an inferior court which a higher court thinks wrong, the higher court does not treat the title as doubtful if the decision of the inferior court was adverse to the title (f), though, on the other hand, the title is treated as doubtful if the decision was in its favour (g).

(3) Where the title depends on the particular words of an inartistic and ambiguous document, the court treats the title as doubtful (h), but not if the difficulty can be solved by the application of general rules of construction (i), or if it depends on the general law of the land (j).

(4) Where the proof of the title depends on doubtful facts as to which no clear presumption in favour of the title can be drawn (k), or as to which the presumption, though not necessarily conclusive, is adverse (l), the title is treated as doubtful: but the title is not treated as doubtful where there is a presumption in favour of the facts supporting the title (m), or where the objection amounts simply to a suspicion of bad faith, so that the presumption in favour of good faith may be invoked (n).

SECT. 8.
Non-Performance of Conditions on Plaintiff's Part.

Presumption not in favour of title.

94. The court has in certain cases compelled a purchaser to take a title depending on adverse possession (o); but he was not compelled to take a leap in the dark (p). In those cases, objections apparent on the face of the title as shown were covered by the possession (q).

Title depending on adverse possession.

terms (s), such as destruction of the subject-matter (t), subsequent illegality (x), or non-existence of a state of things in contemplation of which the parties mutually contracted so that the contract is conditional thereon (b). On the other hand, the contract may be such that the subsequent events do not affect the validity of the contract, which is absolute apart from them, or the right to specific performance; thus, a contract for the sale of a house is not affected because, before completion, the house is burnt down (c), and the same principle applies to the purchase of an annuity (d) or of shares in a company which is wound up after the date of the contract but before completion (e). Where the impossibility, though of a nature to affect the right to performance, relates to subsidiary matters or merely to literal fulfilment, the court seeks to grant performance with compensation (f). Similarly, if after substantial performance by a plaintiff of his obligation it has, without any default on his part, become impossible for him to make complete performance, but he has altered his position by the previous performance, the court enforces performance by the other party; but not if the plaintiff's position has not been altered by his actual performance (g).

tracted with reference to a state of things which at the date of the contract did not exist, so that the contract is thereby void; see title MISTAKE, Vol. XXI., pp. 7, 8; and compare the similar rule at common law where specific goods are sold which at the date of the contract do not exist, the parties being ignorant; see title SALE OF GOODS, Vol. XXV., p. 145. SUB-SECT. 3.—Obligations of Plaintiff.

96. In addition to conditions (h), the plaintiff must also show performance by him of all terms of the contract which he has undertaken to perform, whether expressly or by implication (i), and which he ought to have performed at the date of the writ in the action. This rule, however, only applies to terms which are essential and considerable (k). The court does not bar a claim on the ground that the plaintiff has failed in literal performance, or is in default in some non-essential or unimportant term (l), though in such cases it may grant compensation (m).

Where a condition or essential term ought to have been performed by the plaintiff at the date of the writ, the court does not accept his undertaking to perform in lieu of performance, but dismisses the claim (n).

97. If representations as to future acts have been made by the plaintiff, though not embodied in the contract as conditions or terms, and the contract has been concluded on the faith of them, he is not granted specific performance if the representations have not been fulfilled (o).

(o) Lamare v. Dixon (1873), L. R. 6 H. L. 414. This is so although the representations do not constitute a guarantee, and would not justify an action at law for their non-performance; see Beaumont v. Dukes (1822), Jac. 422, where the vendor represented that he would improve the access to the property; Myers v. Watson (1851), 1 Sim. (N. S.) 523, where the vendor represented that a church would be built. Where a plan is exhibited by the vendor at the time of the contract showing a contemplated arrangement of roads, the vendor is not entitled to change that arrangement so as to attract a different population, though the contract is silent on the point (Peacock v. Penson (1848), 11 Beav. 355; distinguish Whitehouse v. Hugh, [1906] 2 Ch. 283, C. A., where there was express power to depart from the plan). But the exhibition of such a plan, if it is not referred to in the formal contract, does not constitute a contractual obligation (Heriot's Hospital (Feoffees) v. Gibson (1814), 2 Dow. 301, H. L.; Squire v. Campbell (1836), 1 My. & Cr. 459; distinguish Nene Valley Drainage-Commissioners v. Dunkley (1876), 4 Ch. D. 1, C. Part.

Separate

bankruptcy.

98. Where the plaintiff's non-performance is of a separate and collateral contract, although relating to the same subject-matter and entered into simultaneously with the agreement which it is sought to enforce, it does not constitute a defence (p): thus, there may be independent (q) covenants in the same contract or deed, non-performance of one of which does not prevent enforcement of performance of the other (r).

99. Non-performance by the plaintiff cannot be relied on by the defendant where he has waived performance (s), or where it has been caused by breach of contract or by prevention on the part of the defendant (t).

100. Not only must the plaintiff have performed, or been ready to perform, all terms and conditions performance of which was due before or at the date of the writ in the action, but he must be ready and willing to perform terms and conditions to be fulfilled in future under the contract; thus, the commission of an act of bankruptcy by the plaintiff prevents him from enforcing a contract of sale, either as purchaser or vendor; in the former case, because he may not be able to pay the money (a), in the latter case, because he may not be capable of conveying the estate (b). Similarly, a trustee in bankruptcy is unable to enforce a contract of the debtor involving onerous covenants, unless on the terms of the trustee assuming

The rule as to plans applies similarly to private Acts of Parliament (North British Rail. Co. v. Tod (1846), 12 Cl. & Fin. 722, H. L.; Beardner v. London and North Western Rail. Co. (1849), 1 Mac. & G. 112; see title COMPULSORY PURCHASE OF LAND AND COMPENSATION, Vol. VI., pp. 22, 23), unless the plan is incorporated and referred to, when effect must be given to it accordingly (A.-G. v. Tewkesbury and Malvern Rail. Co. (1863), 1 De G. J. & Sm. 423, C. A.; Little v. Newport, Abergavenny and Hereford Rail. Co. (1852), 12 C. B. 752).

Measures*, [1910] 2 Ch. 248, C. A. (interdependent covenants). Breach of an intended covenant in a lease may prevent a lessee obtaining a lease (Coatsworth v. Johnson (1886), 55 L. J. (Q. personal liability for such covenants (c). Performance is enforced against a vendor's trustee in bankruptcy (d), but not against the purchaser's trustee (e).

In the same way, a plaintiff, though he is not bankrupt and has not assigned his property for the benefit of his creditors, may be disentitled to performance on the ground that he is insolvent and unable to perform the obligations resting on him (f). If the contract has been assigned, the material insolvency in a case of this nature is that of the assignee, not that of the assignor (g).

The felony of a plaintiff would also bar specific performance (h).

Inability of a vendor to produce the deeds of the property may prevent him from enforcing the contract (i).

Non-performance of Conditions on Plaintiff's Part.

Insolvency.

Conviction.

SECT. 9.—Repudiation by Plaintiff.

101. It is obvious that a plaintiff who has expressly and in terms repudiated his obligations under the contract is debarred from claiming specific performance of the contract by the other party (k). The same principles apply where the plaintiff, though he has not in express terms refused to perform his part of the contract, has done acts which evince an intention no longer to be bound thereby, and which amount to a complete and total repudiation of everything which has to be done by him (l). Thus, where an employer has wrongfully dismissed his servant, he is not allowed to enforce against the servant, by specific performance or injunction, a restrictive covenant contained in the contract of employment (m).

Plaintiff
Inconsistent with Contract.Effect of acts done in contravention

sary to bar

102. Where a plaintiff claiming specific performance is not merely in default under the contract, but has actually done acts in contravention of its terms, the court may refuse to enforce the contract in his favour; thus, where a vendor, who has agreed to give immediate possession, retakes possession, he is not entitled to specific performance (n). Similarly, in the case of an agreement for a lease, where the lessee commits breaches of the terms of the agreement, such as waste (o), failure to insure or repair (p), or, if the agreement is for a sub-lease, knowingly commits acts which are inconsistent with the covenants of the head lease (q), the contract is not enforced (r). So, also, a covenant to renew is not enforced where the lessee has been guilty of breaches of the expiring lease (s).

It has been said that such acts, to constitute a bar to specific performance, must be gross and wilful (t); and in the case of leases they must, as a rule, be not only such as would work a forfeiture of the legal interest, but also such that the court would not relieve against the forfeiture (u).

(n) Knatchbull v. Grueber (1815), 1 Madd. 153; (1817), 3 Mer. 124; compare Royou v. Paul (1858), 28 L. J. (CH.) 555 (vendor giving notice of intention to resell), explained in Laughton v. Port Erin Commissioners, [1910] A. C. 565, P. C.; Bedford and Cambridge Rail. Co. v. Stanley (1862), 2 John. & H. 746 (railway company agreeing to purchase land, then resorting to compulsory powers: held, that such resort was inconsistent with the agreement and a bar to the company's enforcing it); and see Blackett v. Bates (1865), 1 Ch. App. 117, where it was doubted whether proceedings to set aside an award would not be a bar to a subsequent claim to enforce it specifically.

(o) See Hill v. Barclay (1811), 18 Ves. 56, 63; Lewis v. Bond (1853), 18 Beav. 85; Gregory v. Wilson (1852), 9 Hare, 683; and see title LANDLORD AND TENANT, Vol. XVIII., p. 380. Apparently, a gross case of waste would have this result even in a case where the lease, if executed, would not have contained a proviso for re-entry (Gourlay v. Somerset Duke) (1812), 1 Ves. & B. 68, 73).

(q) Lewis v. Bond, supra.

(r) In certain cases where breaches had been alleged, the court while granting specific performance ordered execution of the lease as at the date of the contract, the lessee undertaking to admit that the lease was executed on that date so that the question of the alleged breaches could be tried in an action at law. Probably under the modern practice the court would decide the whole case (Pain v. Coombs (1857), 1 De G. & J. 34, C. A.; Lillie v. Legh (1858), 3 De G. & J. 204, C. A.; *Rankin v. Specific performance is not refused where the wrongful acts have been waived (a), or are trifling in character (b), or, in the case of leases, such that the court would relieve against a forfeiture of the legal estate (c).

SECT. 11.—Personal Incapacity of Defendant to Make or Perform the Contract.

Legal incapacity.

104. Even where the defendant was at the time of the contract possessed of legal capacity to contract, he may by supervening causes have become incapable in law of performing what he has contracted to do, and on this ground an action for specific performance will fail (e).

though the impossibility is due to the defendant's own act (g). The time at which such impossibility is to be judged is the proper time for performance, not the date of the contract (h).

As to the earlier practice of decreeing against the husband that he obtain the wife's consent or be committed, see Morris v. Stephenson, Stephenson v. Morris (1802), 7 Ves. 474; as to the later practice to refuse to interfere where the wife declined to consent, see Emery v. Wase (1803), 8 Ves. 505.

(g) See Seawell v. Webster (1859), 29 L. J. (CH.) 71, per KINDERSLEY, V.-C., at p. 73. Where an action for damages is brought at law on a contract, the fact that performance has become impossible is only a defence if, by the express terms of the contract, or by reason of a term which is implied from the nature of the case as intended by the parties, supervening impossibility constitutes an excuse for non-performance; otherwise, notwithstanding the impossibility, the defendant is liable in damages; see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 426 et seq.

(h) For instance, if a man enters into a contract which at the time he is not able to perform, but afterwards becomes able to do so, he is bound to perform it; thus, a person may contract to convey an estate on a future day though he is not owner of the estate at the date of the contract, or similarly may contract to sell goods which are not then his property; such contracts would be enforced if the vendor has become possessed of the land or goods; see Holroyd v. Marshall (1862), 10 H. L. Cas. 191; Carne v. Mitchell (1846), 10 Jur. 909; Browne v. Warner (1808), 14 Ves. 409, 412; titles SALE OF GOODS, Vol. XXV., pp. 144, 171; SALE OF LAND, Vol. XXV., p. 342; and as to the validity of such contracts at law, see De Medina v. Norman (1842), 9 M. & W. 820; Hibblewhite v. M' Morine (1839), 5 M. & W. 462; Cuddee v. Rutter (1722), 5 Vin. Abr. 538, pl. 21 (which appears inconsistent with the later authorities); and compare Clayton v. Newcastle (Duke) (1682), 2 Cas. in Ch. 112. Similarly, where contracts dealing with property require parliamentary sanction for their performance, the court protects the property while the sanction is being obtained (Great Western Rail. Co. v. Birmingham and Oxford Junction Rail. Co. (1848), 2 Ph. 597; Hawkes v. Eastern Counties Rail. Co. (1852), 1 De G. M. & G. 737; Devenish v. Brown (1857), 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1043; Frederick v. Coxwell (1829), 3 Y. & J. 514). In Walker v. Barnes (1818), 3 Madd. 247, where an indemnity was to be secured on real estate, the court rejected the plea that the contractor had not sufficient realty, and ordered him to purchase sufficient to enable him to give the security; compare Carey v. Stafford (1725), 3 Swan. 427, n.

(i) Errington v. Aynesly (1788), 2 Bro. C. C. 341 (contract to build a bridge where foundations impossible: relief on building bridge on nearest possible site, and making compensation); compare Paxton v. Newton.

(k) For note (k) see p. 63, post.

Similarly, if though the substance of a contract is legal it involves elements of illegality, the court may model a contract so as to obviate the objection of illegality and order performance of the contract as so modelled (l). The same principle has also been applied when the specific performance of the contract literally would have been refused on grounds other than illegality (m).

106. Where a contract is in the alternative, the contractor having the option which alternative he will perform, and one alternative becomes impossible, different rules apply according to the nature of the case (n):—

(1) If at the date of the contract one alternative is impossible or void, the contractor must perform the other (o).

(2) If both are possible at the date of the contract, but subsequently one alternative is rendered impossible by the act of God, it depends on the intention of the parties whether the contractor can be compelled to perform the other (p).

(3) Where one alternative has been rendered impossible by the act of the contractee, the contractor is entirely absolved (q).

(4) Where one alternative has been prevented by the act of a stranger, the contractor must perform the other (r).

(1854), 2 Sm. & G. 437 (apparently, a contract by a copyholder to grant a lease longer than the customary term is enforceable by an order that he executes leases from time to time to complete the term); A. G. v. Day (1749), 1 Ves. Sen. 218, per Lord ELDON, L.C., at p. 224 (apparently, on the death of one tenant in common who has joined with the other tenant in a contract to convey an estate, the survivor may be ordered to convey a moiety on payment of one half of the purchase price); Barnes v. Wood (1869), L. R. 8 Eq. 424 (contract of husband to sell fee of wife's land).

(k) As to compensation, see pp. 99 et seq., post.

(l) As to illegality generally, see p. 36, ante. The substance of the contract must be legal; see Jenkins v. Green (No. 2) (1859), 27 Beav. 440 (incumbent with statutory power to grant lease at quarterly rent, agreed to grant lease at rent payable half-yearly: held, that the agreement as to rent was a substantial part of the contract, and the court refused to re-model the agreement so as to make the rent payable quarterly): but where a lessee contracted to pay a sum for rent and also the tithe rent-charge, the court treated both sums as payable by way of rent, though it was unlawful to stipulate that a tenant should pay the tithe rent-charge (Carolan v. Brabazon (1846), 3 Jo. & Lat. 200); compare Bettesworth v. St. Paul's (Dean and Chapter) (1728), 1 Bro. Parl. Cas. 240; and see title LANDLORD AND TENANT, Vol. XVIII., p. 476, note (a).

SECT. 13.—Rescission or Variation of Contract.

Rescission
as a bar.

107. The fact that the contract has been rescinded is a bar to any claim to enforce it (t).

Rescission
by parol.

108. Such rescission may be by mutual consent (u); for this purpose a parol agreement is sufficient even if the contract is by deed (v) or is in writing (w), and even though the contract is one coming within the Statute of Frauds (x). All that the court insists upon is clear and precise evidence of a mutual intention to determine and abandon the contract (y). Such evidence may be afforded by conduct (z).

Variation as distinguished from rescission.

109. As regards variation as distinct from rescission, if the contract is such as by law is required to be in writing, parol evidence of an agreement to vary its terms cannot be admitted (a) unless there has been part performance (b). But it seems clear on principle that, even in cases within the Statute of Frauds (c), if the new contract completely replaces the original one, it may be set up, even if made by parol only, as a defence to a claim for specific performance of the original contract on the ground that the latter has been rescinded by mutual consent (d).

SECT. 13.
Rescission or Variation of Contract.

110. Thus, specific performance is refused where the contract has been rescinded by novation; that is, where the parties have come to a fresh agreement which from its nature must be presumed to be in substitution for the former agreement (e). The fresh agreement must have been made for good consideration (f).

Novation.

Novation is also effected where the parties to the original contract agree to substitute for that contract a new contract between one of them and a third party, with the effect of discharging the original contract (g).

New contract with third party.

111. Where the contract is one which may be validly made by parol, the new contract is not invalid, if by parol, merely because the original contract was in writing or under seal (h); and in proper cases a new agreement may be inferred from the conduct of the parties (i).

New parol

contract.

112. A form of rescission which has frequently come in question in suits for specific performance is rescission in exercise of an express power under the contract (j). In such cases, in order that the rescission may be effective, the exact limits of the power must be observed (k). Such a power is not construed as giving an arbitrary or capricious right (l), and must be exercised before it has been waived (m). The party seeking to rescind may by his conduct lose the right to do so (n).

113. A purchaser of land has a right of rescission where the vendor has sold property which he has no power to convey, or of which he has no power to compel the conveyance from others (o).

114. Where one party has by words or by conduct evinced an intention no longer to be bound by the contract, the other party is entitled to treat the words or conduct as a repudiation or refusal to perform on the part of the former party, and to accept such repudiation (p). The contract is then as much determined as by rescission by consent, subject to the injured party's right of action for damages (q). The wrongdoing party's conduct may be either a default going to the root of the contract (r), or acts rendering performance impossible (s). In such cases neither party can claim specific performance (t).

SECT. 14.—Lapse of Time.

116. Delay by a plaintiff in performing his part of the contract is a bar to his enforcing specific performance, provided that as a bar to relief.

Delay in

(1) time was in equity originally of the essence of the contract; or

(2) was made so by subsequent notice; or

(3) the delay has been so great as to be evidence of an abandonment of the contract. In any such case, however, delay has no such effect if it has been caused by the circumstances of the case or waived by the conduct of the parties (b).

117. Time is in equity deemed to have been originally of the essence of the contract either by virtue of an express term to that effect or because such a term is to be implied from a consideration of the real intention of the parties inferred from the nature of the contract. The Court of Chancery, after some doubtful decisions (c), adopted the opinion that a clear expression of intention to treat time as essential must receive effect (d); but the intention must be clearly expressed (e). If a party has stipulated that, as to certain provisions in his favour, time is to be of the essence of the contract, the court will prima facie hold time as essential in respect of other provisions which are against him (f). (b) As to time of performance generally, see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 412 et seq.; see also title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., pp. 168 et seq.; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, Vol. XIX., p. 144. At common law, a plaintiff would fail unless he could show strict compliance with stipulations as to time, or, if no express stipulation appeared, performance or willingness to perform conditions precedent within a reasonable time; see Noble v. Edwardes, Edwardes v. Noble (1877), 5 Ch. D. 378, C. A. But in equity, if such stipulations were to receive effect, it was necessary to show that time was of the essence of the contract; see Seton v. Slade, Hunter v. Seton (1802), 7 Ves. 265. By the Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 25 (7), the rules of equity in this respect prevail in all courts; see title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., p. 154.

(CH.) 449 (which shows that if time is originally of the essence, but is extended, the substituted time is also essential).

(e) Merely specifying a date for performance is not enough (Hearne v. Tenant (1807), 13 Ves. 287; Roberts v. Berry (1852), 16 Beav. 31; affirmed (1853), 3 De G. M. & G. 284, C. A.; *Parkin v. from an express term, the court may infer an intention of the parties to treat time as essential by reason of the nature of the contract. Such an intention is inferred in the case of a contract in respect of a reversionary interest (g), or contracts for the sale of land to be used directly for purposes of trade and commerce (h), and, in particular, public-houses as going concerns (i), and of mines (k), or contracts relating to things which are subject to fluctuations in value from time to time (l). A similar intention may be inferred from the surrounding circumstances in contemplation of which the contract is made, as, for example, the purchase of a house for immediate occupation as a residence (m); also where delay by one party would involve hardship to the other (n).

118. Even though time has not been originally of the essence of the contract, it may be made so by notice given by one party, provided that the other party has been guilty of such delay as can be regarded as gross, vexatious or unnecessary (o). Such notice must be clear and unequivocal (p). It may, it seems, be by parol (q). It must limit a time within which the party in default must perform his obligation, and, if the notice so given fixes a time which in all the circumstances is reasonable, the time so fixed becomes engrafted into the essence of the contract (r).

SECT. 14.
Lapse of Time.

119. Where time is not originally of the essence of the contract, and has not been made so by due notice, delay by a party in performing his part of the contract, or in commencing or prosecuting the enforcement of his rights, may constitute such laches or acquiescence as will debar him from obtaining specific performance (s). The extent of delay which has this effect varies with circumstances, but as a rule must be capable of being construed as amounting to an abandonment of the contract (t). A much shorter period of delay, however, suffices if it is delay in declaring an option or exercising any other unilateral right (a); and if the other party has already given notice that he does not intend to perform the contract, the party aggrieved must take proceedings promptly if he desires to obtain specific performance (b).

Riccard* (1856), 22 Beav. 307 (shortness of notice justified by previous refusal of party in default). Where the nature of the contract involves expedition, a notice that would in other cases be unreasonably short may suffice (Macbryde v. Weekes (1859), 22 Beav. 533 (contract to grant mining lease, one month's notice good); Compton v. Bagley, [1892] 1 Ch. 313 (purchase of farm for purchaser's personal occupation; fourteen days' notice enough)). A notice conditionally waived revives on failure of the condition (*Stewart v. SECT. 14.

Lapse of Time.

When delay is no bar to relief.

Waiver.

120. Such delay as has been under consideration does not, however, bar a claim to specific performance if the plaintiff has been in substantial possession of the benefits under the contract, and is merely claiming the completion of the legal estate (c), or if the delay is due to negotiations between the parties on the question in dispute (d), nor can the benefit of delay be claimed by the party causing it by reason of improper objections taken by him (e).

The objection of delay is waived if, after such a lapse of time as would entitle a party to object on that ground to specific performance, the party so entitled proceeds to deal with the other party regardless of the delay (f); but the party so entitled is not held to have waived the objection unless he acted with full knowledge of the facts (g).

Part IV.—Particular Contracts.

SECT. 1.—Contingent and Expectant Interests.

Enforcement of contracts relating to contingent and expectant interests.

121. The court enforces a contract to convey a contingent or expectant interest (h), provided that there is valuable consideration for the contract, but a voluntary contract, even under seal, to convey such interest is not enforced (i). As illustrations of the enforcement of such contracts, reference may be made to the cases of specific performance of a covenant to settle after-acquired property (k), of a covenant to settle an estate in which the covenantor has merely an expectancy (l), of a contract between two parties for the equal division of what property should come to either of them under a will not actually made at the time (m), of a covenant to charge an annuity on a similar expectancy (n), or of a contract as to the ultimate division of a lunatic's property (o). The court may withhold its assistance in such cases should it deem it inequitable to enforce the agreement (p).

But such possession must purport to be under the contract and be recognised as such (Mills v. Haywood (1877), 6 Ch. D. 196, C. A.; compare Lamare v. Dixon (1873), L. R. 6 H. L. 414* (objections by intending lessee not waived by continuing in possession and paying rent under protest)). The mere leaving a deposit does not constitute acquiescence on the part of a purchaser (Watson v. Reid (1830), 1 Russ. & M. 236).

Interests.

SECT. 2.—Separation Deeds.

122. Specific performance of an executory agreement for present separation (q) between husband and wife (a) may be granted by the court, provided that there is a binding contract (b) for valuable consideration (c), and provided that such contract neither contains provisions which are void as being against public policy (d), nor is objectionable on the ground of duress or other like ground (e).

Arbitration
and Awards.

Agreements to refer.

SECT. 3.—Arbitration and Awards (f).

123. The court does not enforce the specific performance of agreements to refer to arbitration (g). An indirect method of enforcing performance of such an agreement is, however, provided by the Arbitration Act, 1889 (h), which gives the court discretion to stay an action in respect of any dispute which the parties have by written submission agreed to refer to arbitration (i).

Awards.

124. The performance of an award, however, may be specifically enforced by the judgment of the court, if that which is ordered by the award is a matter which, if the subject of an agreement, would have been proper for specific performance (k), and, where a reference has been ordered by the court, the award may be enforced before it has been made a rule of court (l). Where an action is brought for the specific performance of an award, the defendant may raise such grounds of defence as would be available on general principles in resisting such an action; thus, he may object that the award is invalid in law (n), or is uncertain (n), or is in excess of the arbitrator's authority (o), or does not fully deal with the matters submitted (p), or that the agreement of submission, because of unfairness, unreasonableness or other like grounds, is not such as the court would enforce (g). It would seem that a party cannot claim specific performance of an award after taking proceedings to set it aside (r).

SECT. 3.
Arbitration
and Awards.

SECT. 4.—Money and Shares.

125. As regards money, specific performance is not ordered of a contract to pay money (s), or of a contract to make or take a loan of money, whether the loan is to be on security or not (t).

Contracts relating to money.

Specific performance may, however, be ordered of a contract with a company to take and pay for debentures (a); and where a company borrows money, agreeing to give debentures as security, the lender is in equity entitled to the debentures (b). So, where money has been previously advanced, specific performance is ordered of an agreement by the borrower to execute a mortgage (c).

gages.

126. As regards shares, it has already been shown that it is the rule of the court to grant specific performance of contracts to take shares in companies (d). Where contracts are made for the purchase of shares, not by way of allotment from the company, but between an existing shareholder, and an intending shareholder by purchase from the former by the latter, certain special rules apply in such cases of specific performance, partly from the nature of the property sold, but principally by reason of the practice of the London Stock Exchange, if, as is generally the case, the contract is made subject to its rules (e).

Contracts
shares.

In general and apart from the exigencies of the Stock Exchange, where judgment is given in a seller's action for specific performance of a contract of this nature, it is directed that the plaintiff and all proper parties do execute a proper deed of transfer and that the defendant do concur in the steps necessary for registration, and further, if the plaintiff is the seller, he is granted an indemnity against liabilities for calls attaching to the shares after the purchaser became owner in equity (f).

SECT. 4.
Money and Shares.
 Practice of London
 Stock Exchange.

127. Under the practice of the London Stock Exchange, on a sale on the Stock Exchange, the jobber who has made the contract of purchase is entitled to pass to the selling broker the name of the ultimate purchaser, who is to complete the contract (g). This rule is important as determining against whom the action for specific performance is to be brought. It is clear that the original purchaser, the jobber, by passing such a name becomes released from his original liability on the contract, and the person whose name is passed, becoming the ultimate purchaser, becomes liable for performance of the contract (h), and the action is properly brought against him. The following conditions, however, must have been fulfilled: (1) the person whose name is so passed must be capable of contracting (i); (2) he must have authorised the passing of his name (k); (3) he must be a person to whom no reasonable objection can be taken (l). It is immaterial whether such person is a sub-vendee so long as the above conditions are fulfilled (m). The new or substituted contract which binds such person comes into existence, it seems, when the seller accepts him by delivering the transfer on payment of the price (n). The person whose name is ultimately passed may be the last of a series of intermediate purchasers starting from the original purchaser; the contract cannot be enforced against these intermediate purchasers, nor has the seller any equitable right against them, but only against the person whose name is finally passed and accepted (o). Where, however, the original contract has contained a provision by the original purchaser guaranteeing that registration under the sale will duly take place, the original purchaser remains liable for specific performance and indemnity unless and until the registration is duly effected by the ultimate purchaser (p).

Bristowe (1868), L. R. 4 C. P. 36, Ex. Ch.; and see 3 Seton, Judgments and Orders, 7th ed., pp. 2209.

(g) For a statement as to this practice, see Nickalls v. Merry (1875), L. R. 7 H. L. 530; compare Re Plumbly, Ex parte Grant (1880), 13 Ch. D. 667, C. A.; and see title STOCK EXCHANGE, pp. 239 et seq., post.

(h) The purchase by the jobber or original purchaser is a contract from which he may be discharged either by performance, or by passing the name of a nominee, on whom the liability then rests.

(i) Thus, the name of an infant does not serve (Nickalls v. Merry, supra; affirming Merry v. Nickalls (1872), 7 Ch. App. 733, which reversed the decision of BACON, V.-C., and overruled Rennie v. Morris (1872), L. R. 13 Eq. 203; Heritage v. Paine (1876), 2 Ch. D. 594).

(k) Maxted v. Paine (1869), L. R. 4 Exch. 81.

(o) Torrington v. Lowe (1868), L. R. 4 C. P. 26. Castellan v. Hobson (1870), L. R. 10 Eq. 47, seems inconsistent and not law; see also Coles v. Bristowe (1868), 4 Ch. App. 3; Maxted v. Paine, supra; title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 333.

Independently of the Stock Exchange, consequences similar in effect to the foregoing may result from the special bargain or contract of the parties (q).

SECT. 4.
Shares.

128. Where a seller, having a good title to shares, has executed a valid transfer thereof, and the transaction is on the London Stock Exchange on ordinary terms, but the company's directors refuse in exercise of their powers to register the transfer, it is clear that the seller has performed his contract, since he does not undertake to give an absolute right to registration (r). The same rule appears to apply to contracts outside the Stock Exchange (s), unless there is some special term to the contrary (t). In general, it appears that the duty of obtaining registration of the transfer rests with the purchaser (a). Clearly a defendant resisting specific performance on the ground of non-registration will fail if non-registration is due to his own default or neglect (b).

Special contract.
Regulation : obligation to perform.

129. The fact that the company is being wound up may have an effect on the grant of relief by the court. This depends on whether the winding-up petition was presented when the contract was made, neither party being aware of the fact, in which case the contract is not enforced (c); but it seems that if the petition is only presented after the contract was made the purchaser is liable, and, even if specific performance ought not to be granted, the vendor will be entitled to an indemnity (d).

winding up.

130. The fact that a plaintiff is not the legal registered owner of shares, but merely the equitable owner, is not a bar to his suing for specific performance (e).

SECT. 4.
Money and Shares.

Call on shares before contract.

Enforcement of agreements relating to partnership.

131. It appears that a call made on the shares before the date of the contract, the purchaser being ignorant thereof, is not a ground for resisting specific performance (f).

SECT. 5.—Partnership (g).

132. The court does not as a general rule enforce an agreement to form and carry on a partnership (h), even though there is no particular objection on the ground of illegality (i), fraud or other impropriety (k). The court does, however, enforce such an agreement by ordering the parties to execute a formal deed where the parties have actually entered on performance by carrying on the partnership business (l), and it also enforces a contract for the purchase of a share in partnership (m), or for an option to enter into partnership (n). It seems doubtful whether the court would specifically enforce a contract to execute a deed of partnership as distinguished from a contract to enter into a partnership (o).

SECT. 6.—Contracts to Leave Property by Will.

Contracts to leave property by will.

133. A contract in writing for good consideration to leave by will a definite property to a particular person may be enforced as against all persons claiming as volunteers under the person who so agreed (p). Specific performance is not, however, ordered where the person who entered into the contract was merely acting in exercise

(f) See Hawkins v. Maltby (1867), L. R. 4 Eq. 572; 3 Ch. App. 188; (1868), L. R. 6 Eq. 505; (1869), 4 Ch. App. 200.

SECT. 1.—Institution of Proceedings.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Courts having Jurisdiction.

134. Actions for the specific performance of contracts between vendors and purchasers of real estate, including contracts for leases, are expressly assigned to the Chancery Division (s), but actions for the specific performance of contracts of any other nature may be instituted at the plaintiff's option in either the Chancery or the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice (t) in England (u), subject to the powers of transfer from one division to the other (a).

The High Court of Justice.

Under the jurisdiction given to the High Court to order rectification of the register of shareholders of a company (b), the court may in effect grant specific performance (c), but this jurisdiction can only be invoked in simple cases (d).

See, in particular, ibid., s. 24 (7), which provides that the High Court of Justice and the Court of Appeal shall grant either absolutely or on such reasonable terms and conditions as to them shall appear just all such remedies as any party may seem entitled to whether legal or equitable, so that, as far as possible, all matters in controversy between the parties may be completely and finally determined. On the general effect of this provision, see Harris v. Beauchamp Brothers, [1894] 1 Q. B. 801, C. A., per DAVEY, L.J., at pp. 808, 809. SECT. 1.
Institution of Proceedings.

County court.

135. Where the subject-matter of the contract does not exceed the limits of the county court jurisdiction (e) the plaintiff may obtain relief by way of specific performance in a county court. In actions for specific performance of contracts to sell or purchase property, this jurisdiction is limited to cases where the purchase price of such property does not exceed £500 (f), and, where the action is brought to enforce a contract to lease property (g), to cases where the value of such property is less than that sum (h).

Mayor's Court,
London.

136. The Mayor's Court, London, has unlimited jurisdiction in specific performance where the whole cause of action arises within its local jurisdiction (i).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Nature of Proceedings.

Form of proceedings.

137. The proceedings to obtain a judgment for specific performance are usually in the form of an action in the Chancery Division of the High Court, though such proceedings, if they do not relate to a sale or lease of land, may be brought in the King's Bench Division (k).

Proceedings for rectification of the register of a company (l) are commenced by motion or originating summons (m). In the county court the proceedings are of the usual character (n).

Special case.

138. Under the Rules of the Supreme Court, the determination of questions relating to contracts for the sale and purchase of real or leasehold estate may be obtained by special case stated in the action (o).

Vendor and purchaser summons.

139. Questions arising on contracts for the sale of land may be determined by a "vendor and purchaser summons" (p), provided however, subject to certain modifications. Thus, where a party to the contract is trustee for a third party, specific performance of the contract may be obtained at the instance of the third party (c). Similarly, in certain cases of agency (d) and of marriage settlements (e), or where the contract has been so far acted upon as to give a stranger to the contract reasonable expectations founded upon the contract (f), a stranger to the contract may enforce specific performance (g). Reference as to title.	Even though no defect in title has been pleaded (q), the defendant is entitled to have an inquiry (r) directed as to the title of the plaintiff to the land in question. If, however, he has admitted the title of the plaintiff in his pleading, this is an express waiver which excludes the right to a reference of title (s). Compensation may be granted for a defect appearing on an investigation of title, though no such claim was made on the pleadings and no such compensation was awarded by the judgment (t).

Compensa- tion.	When an undertaking has been given not to deliver a defence, leave may be given to defend if it appears, by reason of a decision subsequent to the undertaking, that there may be a good defence (u).
Effect of undertaking not to defend.	150. The statement of claim should specify in detail the relief sought, and, where specific performance only is sought in an action between vendor and purchaser in which the defendant admits in his defence that he is unwilling to complete, but does not appear at the trial, the plaintiff is only entitled to the usual decree, and not to judgment rescinding the contract and forfeiting the deposit (w).
Default of appearance at trial.	151. Where the defendant relies on the Statute of Frauds (a) as a defence to an action for specific performance, this defence must be expressly raised by his pleading (b).

(s) It is sufficient for this purpose if the defendant pleads merely a belief that at the date of the contract the plaintiff had a title (Phipps v. Child (1857), 3 Drew. 709); but it is not enough for a party relying on waiver to allege facts from which such waiver is an inference of law; he must allege the facts and the waiver; see R. S. Relief.SUB-SECT. 1.—The Judgment for Specific Performance.

152. The judgment for specific performance generally commences with a declaration that the agreement in question ought to be specifically performed and orders and adjudges the same accordingly. The judgment then usually includes directions consequent on the declaration, which vary according to the circumstances of the case. Thus, the judgment may include an inquiry as to damages suffered by the plaintiff by reason of the defendant's delay (c), and a reference to chambers of the vendor's title (d). Again, where the vendor's title has been accepted by or forced on the purchaser, the judgment may contain directions for the ascertainment of how much is payable by the purchaser in respect of the purchase-money, whether with or without interest (e), and whether with or without compensation or abatement (f). It may also contain special directions as to the rents or the deterioration of the property (g). On payment of what is due from the purchaser the judgment may direct a conveyance by the vendor, or a vesting order, or the appointment of a person to convey (h). Orders dealing with the deposit may also be necessary (i), and, in the case of agreements for leases, special forms of order are required (k).

to determine whether or not the vendor can make a good title (l), since the court does not grant the extraordinary remedy of specific enforcement of a sale unless it is satisfied that the vendor has such a title as the purchaser either is willing, or can be forced, to accept. It follows that a reference of title is generally ordered in a vendor's action on the purchaser's application (m), and may also, when necessary, be ordered in a purchaser's action (n). A vendor cannot be permitted to except to his own title (o).

subject of the reference.

*154. The reference of title, though in general terms, is confined to such title as under the conditions of the contract the vendor is bound to show. Such conditions (p) may restrict the purchaser's right to object to the title (q), or to make requisitions or inquiries from the vendor as to his title (r), or may even preclude the purchaser from inquiring into or objecting to the title

(l) As to the extent of the vendor's obligation to make a good title and the mode of investigation and proof of the vendor's title, so far as they relate to contracts for the sale of land, see title SALE OF LAND, Vol. XXV., pp. 341 et seq. An inquiry into title may, of course, be directed in other matters than sale of land, such as contracts for sale of shares (Shaw v. Fisher (1848), 2 De G. & Sm. 11; Curling v. Flight (1848), 2 Ph. 613); but there must be a sale of property to justify such an inquiry.

(m) Jenkins v. Hiles (1802), 6 Ves. 646 (purchaser admitted he had no specific objection, but inquiry was ordered); Lesturgeon v. Martin (1834), 3 My. & K. 255 (general inquiry ordered, though purchaser admitted he had only one particular objection); Fleetwood v. Green (1809), 15 Ves. 594. Where a defect of title appears prominently on the pleadings, the court may decide for the defect and against the title without ordering an inquiry; compare Lucas v. James (1849), 7 Hare, 410, per WIGRAM, V.-C., at p. 425. A delay by a purchaser in raising a patent objection may result in his being ordered to pay the costs of the inquiry; see Upperton v. Nickolson (1871), 6 Ch. App. 436; Curling v. Austin (1862), 2 Drew. & Sm. 129; McMurray v. Spicer (1868), L. R. 5 Eq. 527.

(n) The purchaser may, however, have to bear the costs of the inquiry, if it appears that the vendor had at the proper time disclosed a good title (Lyle v. Yarrowborough (Earl) (1859), John. 70), or if he afterwards waives his objections (Bennett v. Fowler (1840), 2 Beav. 302; Freme v. Wright (1819), 4 Madd. 364).

(o) Bradley v. Munton (1852), 15 Beav. 460.

(p) As to conditions generally with reference to contracts for the sale of land, see title SALE OF LAND, Vol. XXV., pp. 317 et seq.

(q) See, for instance, Duke v. Barnett (1846), 2 Coll. 337 (purchaser, agreeing to accept vendor's title without dispute, debarred from objecting on ground of incumbrance); compare Wilmot v. Wilkinson (1827), 6 B. & C. 506; see also Hanks v. Palling (1856), 6 E. & B. 659 (purchaser of fee farm rent precluded from objecting that rent was extinguished by reason of Statute of Limitations); Hopkinson v. Chamberlain, [1908] 1 Ch. 853 (condition precluding purchaser from requiring satisfaction of mortgage).

(r) In such cases the purchaser may, however, show objections to title which he has discovered elsewhere than by inquiries or requisitions from the vendor, as in Darlington v. Hamilton (1854), Kay, 550; Waddell v. Wolfe (1874), L. R. 9 Q. B. 515 (objection to title discovered by purchaser); Smith v. Robinson (1879), 13 Ch. D. 148 (defect appearing from deed disclosed by vendor himself); compare Jones v. Watts (1890), 43 Ch. D. 574, C. A.; Re Cox and Neve's Contract, [1891] 2 Ch. 109; see Life Interest and Reversionary Securities Corporation v. Hand-in-Hand Fire and Life Insurance Society, [1898] 2 Ch. 230 (proof aliunde of improper exercise of power of sale); and see title SALE OF LAND, Vol. XXV., pp. 321, 322.

Such conditions are binding if not misleading (a), and if clearly expressed (b). SECT. 2.
Relief.

155. A reference of title is not ordered where the vendor expressly sells merely such interest as he has (c), or such title as he himself bought with (d), or where the contract is not so much a contract of sale as a compromise of disputed rights (e), or where the contract was for the sale of the vendor's share and interest in property and not the property itself (f). Sale of interest as distinguished from property.

156. Again, a reference of title is not ordered though the party claiming it is primâ facie entitled to have it, if he has waived the right thereto, either expressly (g) or by implication (h). Such waiver may go to the whole of the title, or merely to some particular objection or objections (i). Waiver as a bar to reference.

Where such waiver is to be inferred from conduct the nature of the acts relied on must be considered; if a particular defect is curable by the vendor, the purchaser, with knowledge of the defect, may yet Implied waiver.

(s) Hume v. Bentley (1852), 5 De G. & Sm. 520 (purchaser of leaseholds precluded from objecting that by Act of Parliament lessor was without power of granting leases); see title SALE OF LAND, Vol. XXV., p. 322.

(t) Re National Provincial Bank of England and Marsh, [1895] 1 Ch. 190 (prior title not to be required, investigated or objected to); compare Re Scott and Alvarez's Contract, *Scott v. (a) Re Banister, Broad v. Munton (1879), 12 Ch. D. 131, C. A. (conditions misleading, as requiring purchaser to assume what is known to vendor to be untrue or as stating as not to be accurately known to vendor what he did know); Re Marsh and Granville (Earl) (1883), 24 Ch. D. 11, C. A.; compare Harnett v. Baker (1875), L. R. 20 Eq. 50; Blenkhorn v. Penrose (1880), 29 W. R. 237; Re Haedicke and Lipski's Contract, [1901] 2 Ch. 666 (inadequate disclosure by vendor); Jones v. Clifford (1876), 3 Ch. D. 779 (objection allowed after purchaser, under a common mistake, had accepted the title). Best v. Hamand (1879), 12 Ch. D. 1, C. A., can perhaps be reconciled with Re Banister, Broad v. Munton, supra, on the ground that the purchaser was merely held to be disentitled to recover his deposit and was not ordered to complete the purchase.

(b) See Waddell v. Wolfe (1874), L. R. 9 Q. B. 515; Jones v. Clifford, supra; compare Southby v. Hutt (1837), 2 My. & Cr. 207; Anderson v. Higgins (1844), 1 Jo. & Lat. 718; title SALE OF LAND, Vol. XXV., p. 322.

(h) The implied waiver must be clear and free from surprise or misrepresentation on the part of the vendor; see Jenkins v. Hiles (1802), 6 Ves. 646, 655; Haydon v. Bell (1838), 1 Beav. 337; Blacklow v. Laws (1842), 2 Hare, 40; title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., pp. 165, 166. without waiving the objection proceed towards completion, since he may assume that the defect will be cured (k). Where, however, the defect is known to be incurable, a purchaser who proceeds without insisting on the objection is generally held to have waived it (l). Even taking possession in such cases may not constitute a waiver of the right to object if possession is taken either under the terms of the contract or by subsequent arrangement without prejudice to the right to a good title (m). Acts, however, which go beyond mere possession and amount to acts of ownership, either from the length of the possession (n) or from the nature of the acts (o), constitute a waiver (p). A waiver may be inferred where a particular objection, known to the purchaser, was passed over in silence in a subsequent supplemental contract (q); but a continuance of negotiations (r), or a delay in enforcing the contract (s), does not bar a right to investigate title (t).

Particular cases of relief.

In certain cases the court, while holding the facts insufficient to establish a waiver, has ordered payment into court of the purchase price (a); and even where the acts of the purchaser have been held to constitute a waiver of his right to investigate the vendor's title, the court has not enforced the contract where it has appeared aliunde that the vendor's title was defective (b). Conversely, a purchaser may himself cure a defect, which he will thus be debarred from objecting to, and specific performance will be ordered (c).

Commissioners of Works and Public Buildings* (1868), 16 W. R. 889. In Anspach (Margravine) v. Noel, supra, waiver was inferred from possession and further acts. Where the defect known before possession is capable of being cured by the purchaser, a waiver is not necessarily implied (Re Gloag and Miller's Contract (1883), 23 Ch. D. 320). As to defects cured by the purchaser, see the text, infra.

SECT. 2.
Relief.

A waiver must be expressly pleaded (d).

Plea.

157. The reference of title may be expressly limited in accordance with the requirements of the case (e), or it may be open and general (f). It is directed not merely to the question of whether or not a good title is made out, but also to the time when such title was shown (g), and other matters (h).

Form and scope of reference.

158. The reference of title may be ordered at any stage of the proceedings, and is sometimes ordered on interlocutory motion (i).

When reference ordered.

159. The inquiry takes place in the chambers of the judge (k). Evidence of any material facts may be given by affidavit (l). The master embodies the result of the inquiry in a certificate (m), which may be objected to by either party by taking out a summons to discharge or vary the certificate within eight clear days after filing (n); otherwise the certificate becomes binding, unless special grounds are shown for reopening it (o).

If the certificate is in favour of the title and no application is made to vary it, or the application, if made, has failed (p), the court as a rule (q) orders specific performance, or the certificate may be referred back to chambers for review (r), in which case the vendor has an opportunity of removing objections (s), while the purchaser is entitled to bring in further objections (t). If the certificate is against the title and no application is made to vary it, or the application, if made, has failed, specific performance is refused (a), and the vendor, being plaintiff, may be ordered to repay the deposit with interest at 4 per cent., and the court may declare that the purchaser has a lien on the estate for deposit, interest and costs of the action (b). A defect in the title may, however, be cured on the hearing (c), or it may appear that the purchaser has cured the defect or acquired the means of curing it (d), so that the vendor's claim for specific performance will be allowed (e).

Costs.

160. In an action for specific performance, as in other actions (f), the costs are in the general discretion of the court (g); but as a rule, where the dispute is as to title, the vendor has to pay the costs up to the time when he first showed a good title (h). A purchaser, hence it ought not to state a title as good subject to performance of conditions (Lewis v. Lozam (1816), 1 Mer. 179; Magennis v. Fallon (1829), 2 Moll. 561; Esdaile v. Stephenson (1822), Madd. & G. 366). If against the title, it should state the grounds of defect (Green v. Monks (1818), 2 Moll. 325).

however, who has caused the litigation by his objections may have to pay the costs if these objections are overruled, even though in chambers some defect not hitherto in question has for the first time been raised (i); and, similarly, he may be ordered to pay the costs up to and inclusive of the hearing where it was necessitated by defences which he failed to establish, but which prevented the usual reference to title on interlocutory motion (j), or where the questions raised are questions of contract only (k). Considerations of costs may also turn on whether the case was one proper for determination without an action by a vendor and purchaser summons (l).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Interest, Rents, Deterioration, and Payment into Court.

161. On a contract for the sale of real property, the legal estate does not pass until the formal conveyance is executed (m). Between the date of the contract, being one of which specific performance can be decreed (n), and the conveyance the legal estate remains in the vendor, but the equitable estate passes to the purchaser (o); and, as it is inequitable that the same person should enjoy both the rents and profits of the property and also the interest on the purchase-money, up to the time, if any, fixed for completion (p), or, if no time is fixed, up to the time at which completion ought to take place, that is, as a rule, when a good title is shown (q), the vendor is entitled to the rents and profits and is liable to bear outgoings. After that date the purchaser is, as a rule, entitled to the rents and profits, but is liable to bear the outgoings and to pay the vendor interest at 4 per cent. on the unpaid purchase-money (r).

Relief.

Interest on purchase-money :
vendor in possession.

Where the purchase price is to be fixed subsequently to the contract, interest does not run until the price is ascertained (s).

162. Apart from the special terms of the contract, the following rules as to interest apply :—

If there is delay in completion which is due to the default of the vendor, and the interest is in excess of the rents, the purchaser is not liable to pay interest during the period of delay, but the vendor retains the rents (t). Where, however, the delay is due to the fault of the purchaser, interest runs from the proper date for completion (a).

If, where completion is delayed, the purchaser appropriates the purchase-money and gives notice of the appropriation to the vendor, the vendor is only entitled to the interest, if any, accruing on the money so appropriated (b).

Express contractual provisions.

163. The above rules may be varied by special terms of the contract; for instance, (1) rents until completion may be expressly reserved to the vendor (c); or (2) the contract may provide that the purchaser shall pay interest from the date fixed for completion, notwithstanding delay from any cause whatever, in which case interest is payable even if delay is due to the fault of the vendor (d),

Todd* (1819), 1 Swan. 260, where the vendor retained possession of the estate and of one-third of the purchase-money for fifteen years, owing to his own wrongful delay, the purchaser was given the whole of the rents and interest on one-third of the rents from the date of their accruing. so long as there is on his part no bad faith or gross negligence (e); or (3) the contract may exempt the purchaser from payment of interest only in the case of wilful default on the part of the vendor, this involving actual default on the part of the vendor, and more than mere mistake or oversight, though not necessarily meaning intentional delay or wilful obstruction (f).

SECT. 2.

Relief.

A vendor in possession himself (g) is charged a fair occupation rent (h), unless he simply remained in possession owing to the purchaser's default (i). Liability for outgoings as a rule goes with the right to receive rents (j).

Vendor's liabilities.

164. In the above instances (k) it has been assumed that the vendor has remained in possession. If, however, the purchaser has taken possession, he pays interest on the unpaid purchase-money from the time of possession (l), even though the delay in completion has been due to the vendor's fault, and even though no profits have been made out of the land (m). The purchaser may, however, where delay has arisen, appropriate the purchase-money for purposes of the contract and give notice to the vendor, who is then only entitled to claim such interest as the money so appropriated produces (n).

Deterioration.

165. A vendor, as constructive trustee, is liable for deterioration to the property while he is in possession in the interval before completion, provided such deterioration is due to his wilful default or want of reasonable care (o); but he is not liable for deterioration occurring without his fault (p), and still less for deterioration due to the purchaser's own fault (q).

Payment into court.

166. In an action for specific performance an order may be made for payment into court by the purchaser of the purchase price; this is done if the purchaser is in possession and a good title has been disclosed by the vendor or admitted by the purchaser (r), or the delay in showing a good title is due to no default on the part of the vendor (s). The order will, however, be refused if the vendor is in default (t), or if the purchaser is in possession under another title than the contract, as, for example, as tenant to the vendor (a), or if the contract entitles the purchaser to possession before completion of the title (b).

The purchaser's right to claim for deterioration may be enforced by action after conveyance in ignorance of the facts (Clarke v. Ramuz, [1891] 2 Q. B. 456, C. A.; Connolly v. Keating (No. 2), [1903] 1 I. R. 356), and the claim may be set off against balance of purchase-money (Ferguson v. Tadman (1827), 1 Sim. 530), or interest (Phillips v. Silvester (1872), 8 Ch. App. 173); and see, further, title SALE OF LAND, Vol. XXV., pp. 368, 370.

SECT. 2.
Relief.

Such an order may be made on motion, supported by affidavit (d), and in a proper case before delivery of defence (e).

SUB-SECT. 4.—The Deposit.

167. In an action for specific performance questions may arise as to the deposit paid by the purchaser on the making of the contract, such deposit being in the nature of part payment if the contract is duly completed, or, if the contract fails owing to the default of the purchaser, serving as earnest or security for the due performance of his contract and therefore liable to forfeiture (f).

Questions as to deposit.

A purchaser, in claiming specific performance, may, in the alternative, claim a return of the deposit and damages, and enforcement of his lien on the property for the same (g). Similarly, in a vendor's action for specific performance, the purchaser in resisting the claim may counterclaim for return of the deposit, with interest at 4 per cent., and for enforcement of his lien in respect thereof (h). It does not, however, necessarily follow that because a vendor is unsuccessful in his claim for specific performance the purchaser is entitled to a return of his deposit (i). The right to have the deposit returned depends in some cases upon an express condition of forfeiture (k), or, in the absence of such a condition, upon the intention to be collected from the whole contract (l).

SECT. 2.

Relief.

Application
for relief.

SUB-SECT. 5.—Ancillary Relief.

168. Ancillary relief may be obtained after judgment in an action for specific performance where such further relief becomes necessary (m). The nature of the relief varies according to the subject-matter of the contract and the position occupied by the parties. The application for the relief must be made to the court by which the judgment was pronounced (n).

Nature of relief.

169. Thus, either party may by motion in the action obtain an order fixing a time and place for completion of the contract, payment of the unpaid purchase-money, and delivery of the executed conveyance and title deeds (o), or an order fixing the period within which the judgment is to be obeyed.

Enforcement of order granting relief.

170. Where the defendant fails to obey such an order within the time limited, the plaintiff may without further order issue a writ of sequestration against his estate and effects (p). Where the default is in payment of money, the plaintiff may proceed by writ of fiere facias (q). An order requiring the defendant to perform some act other than or besides the payment of money may be enforced by writ of attachment or committal (r). The court may also in case of default, besides or instead of proceedings against the defaulting party for contempt, order the party who has obtained judgment, or some other person appointed by the court, to do the act required to be done, at the cost of the party in default (s).

Vesting order or conveyance.

171. A purchaser who has obtained judgment for specific performance of a contract concerning land may also, if the vendor refuses to convey the land, apply to the court for an order vesting it in him, or appointing someone to convey it to him, with a release where necessary of contingent rights (t).

(m) After judgment for specific performance, a defendant purchaser cannot repudiate the title or the contract without the leave of the court (Halkett v. Dudley (Earl), [1907] 1 Ch. 590, per PARKER, J., at p. 601); see title SALE OF LAND, Vol. XXV., p. 403.

When judgment has been given for specific performance and there are any parties to the action who are necessary parties to the conveyance, but who are not sui juris, the court may declare such persons to be trustees, and make a vesting order as to or appoint some person to convey their interests (a). Similar orders may be made with regard to the interests of unborn persons who might claim under any party to the action, or under the will or voluntary settlement of any deceased person who was a party to the contract (b).

SECT. 2.

Relief.

Vesting order as to interests of persons not sui juris.

172. Either party may also obtain an order rescinding the contract in default of completion within a fixed time (c). A vendor is not debarred from moving for such an order by the fact that the judgment at the trial contained a declaration of his lien for unpaid purchase-money and gave him liberty to apply for the purpose of enforcing it (d).

Order rescinding contract.

An order may be made on the motion for payment of the plaintiff's costs by the defendant, and for a stay of further proceedings in the action, except such as are necessary for the recovery of the costs of the action and motion (e).

If the purchaser fails to comply with the judgment, the vendor may obtain further relief by an order for the sale of the property (i), or by an order appointing a receiver pending sale (k), or by an injunction operating to restore to him possession of the property (l).

SUB-SECT. 6.—*Specific Performance with Compensation.*SECT. 2.
Relief.(i.) Where there is No Condition as to Compensation (m).

175. A vendor may obtain specific performance with compensation against a purchaser under a contract of sale even where the vendor is unable to fulfil the exact terms of the bargain, provided—

(1) that the purchaser will on completion obtain substantially what he bargained for, and

(2) that the difference in value between the thing contracted for and the thing sold can be fairly computed.

Thus, specific performance with compensation may be granted at the instance of the vendor where an estate is described as freehold and in fact a very small portion is held only from year to year (a); where, in the case of a large estate, there is an objection to the title of a very small part not material to the enjoyment of the rest (b); where a small portion of a property is wrongly described (c); where, on a purchase by a tenant in possession, the measurements are given inaccurately (d); where, on the sale of a house, the vendor fails to disclose a deed acknowledging that he is not entitled to light to certain windows (e); where, on the sale of a colliery, the profits are overstated (f); where tithes contracted to be sold are subject to small annual charges (g); where the estate sold is subject to quit-rents (h); where an estate is described as subject to tithe with the exception of a certain part and it is not proved that that part is so exempt (i).

T. 35, a purchaser of seventeen shares was ordered to perform the contract by accepting eleven shares with compensation for the loss of the remaining six shares, as the vendors had acted under a bonâ fide mistake. The decision appears doubtful as to their title to sell.

The court does not grant compensation to the purchaser where the defect in the subject-matter of the contract is immaterial (k), or was visible to everybody at the time of the purchase (l); and where a purchaser, after knowing of a defect, acts in a manner implying a waiver of his right to compensation for such defect, the vendor may insist on completion of the purchase without compensation (m).

Where vendor not entitled to specific performance with compensation.

176. Where a material part of the subject-matter of a contract is wanting, and the vendor cannot substantially give to the purchaser that which he agreed to buy, the court does not grant specific performance with compensation at the instance of the vendor. Thus, specific performance with compensation may be refused where third parties have prejudicial rights over the property sold (n); where there is a defect in title in respect of a substantial portion of the property (o); where, on the sale of a house with land adjoining, the vendor has no title to a strip of land between the house and a road (p); where the vendor cannot show a title to a substantial part of the property which is material to the enjoyment of the property (q); where the measurements of the property are substantially less in a material particular than those by which it is described (r); where the tenure of an estate contracted to be sold is different from that which the vendor represented himself to be Specific performance with compensation is also refused where the amount to be awarded as compensation cannot be fairly ascertained (d), or where the vendor has acted in a manner inconsistent with the contract (e).

Indemnity.

177. A purchaser may obtain specific performance with compensation against a vendor under a contract of sale where the vendor is unable to fulfil the exact terms of the bargain, but the difference in value between the actual subject-matter and that stated in the contract can be measured by the court and form the subject of abatement in the amount of the purchase-money (g).

Thus, specific performance with compensation may be granted where the vendor, who has agreed to sell the fee, has only a partial interest (h), where the vendor is only entitled to a moiety of the land he has agreed to sell (i); where there is a deficiency in the acreage of the property sold (k); where there is a misrepresentation as to the state of the roads on the property sold (l).

178. This principle, however, is not applied where the vendor has reserved a right to determine the contract rather than complete with compensation (m); nor where the alienation of the partial interest of the vendor might prejudice the rights of third parties (n); nor where the purchaser has from the first been aware of the vendor's incapacity to convey the whole of the property sold (o); nor where the amount of compensation is incapable of computation (p); nor where the enforcement of the contract with compensation would be inequitable (q), or disappoint the reasonable expectations of the parties (r).

compensation.

A condition which provides that errors and misstatements are not to annul a sale and that no compensation is to be allowed, does not enable a vendor to enforce specific performance without compensation if the error or misstatement is a substantial one (j).

The court will not order specific performance with compensation unless the amount of such compensation can be reasonably estimated (k).

182. Similar principles apply where a purchaser seeks to enforce against a vendor specific performance with compensation of a contract of sale which contains a condition for compensation, except that in such case the rule as to strict construction does not

SECT. 2.
Relief.

Specific performance with compensation is accordingly granted where there is a misstatement in the particulars (m); even, in some cases, where the purchaser knew of the inaccuracy of the statement (n).

Compensation may, however, be refused on the ground that the misstatement or omission does not affect the value of the property (o), or that the misdescription was verbally corrected by the auctioneer even though the purchaser did not hear the correction (p).

Where compensation refused.

A purchaser's right to compensation may be abrogated by the operation of another term of the contract, as, for example, a condition giving the vendor the right to rescind (q), or by the impossibility of estimating the amount of the compensation to be paid (r).

183. A clause which provides that no misdescription shall annul the sale and that no compensation shall be allowed in respect of any misdescription prevents a purchaser obtaining specific performance with compensation (s).

Part I.—In General.

PART I.
In General.

187. A statute (a) is a declaration of the law as it exists (b), or as it shall be from the time at which such statute is to take effect, made by the Sovereign in Parliament, as the supreme legislative authority (c), in the manner prescribed by existing statutes (d) and by the rules of each House (e). Definition of statute.

188. Subject to the statutory provisions referred to below, a Bill, statute must have been embodied in a Bill which has passed through all its stages in both Houses of Parliament in one session (f), and has then received the assent of the Sovereign. On receiving the assent the Bill acquires statutory force as from the day on which it is appointed to come into operation, or, if no time is appointed, then on the day of receiving such assent (g).

189. Every Money Bill sent up to the House of Lords at least one month before the end of a session, indorsed with the certificate of the Speaker of the House of Commons that it is a Money Bill, if not passed by the first-mentioned House without amendment within one month after being so sent up, becomes an Act of Parliament, or Statute, after presentation to the Sovereign, and the signification of the Royal Assent (h). Money Bill.

190. If any Public Bill, other than a Money Bill, or a Bill providing for the extension of the duration of Parliament beyond five years, has been passed by the House of Commons in three successive sessions, whether of the same Parliament or not, and having been sent up to the House of Lords at least one month before the end of each session is not passed either without amendment or with agreed amendments, it will, on presentation to the Sovereign and receiving the Royal Assent, become law, notwithstanding that the House of Lords has not consented to it, provided Effect of Parliament Act.

(a) "Statute" was defined by Coke as "an act of parliament made by the king, the lords, and the commons" (Co. Litt. 126 a). As to the distinctions between statutes and ordinances, see Willes Claim of Peerage (1869), L. R. 4 H. L. 126. "Statute" has had more than one meaning. It has been applied to a code, such as the Statute of Westminster I., or to all the Acts passed in one session, which was the original meaning of the word (R. v. Bawell (1857), 7 E. & B. 848, per Lord CAMPBELL, C.J., at p. 851).

(b) A "declaratory" Act properly so called, as distinguished from the various kinds of Acts mentioned below (see pp. 114 et seq., post), which are primâ facie prospective (see p. 159, post).

(c) A statute is the only instrument which can command the obedience of the whole people (Middleton v. Crofts (1736), 2 Atk. 650, per Lord HARDWICKE, L.C., at p. 652).

(d) As by the Parliament Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 13).

(e) See title PARLIAMENT, Vol. XXI., p. 702.

(f) The Standing Orders are sometimes suspended in the case of private Bills so as to carry them over to the next session; see title PARLIAMENT, Vol. XXI., p. 701. For the exceptions created by the Parliament Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 13), see the text, infra.

(g) See pp. 117, 155 et seq., post.

(h) Parliament Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 13), s. 1 (1), (3). For the definition of a Money Bill, see title PARLIAMENT, Vol. XXI., p. 776.

PART I. that two years have elapsed between its first second reading and In General. its last third reading in the House of Commons (i).

Statutory authority.

191. As the expression of the will of a Sovereign Parliament, the authority of a statute is supreme. It may define or override the common law, and in like manner a more recent statute may define or override an earlier, so far as the provisions of the latter limit or are repugnant to the former (j). It follows that no statute can provide for its own non-repeal or control future legislation (k).

Ignorantia juris non excusat.

192. All the King's subjects must be taken to know the statute law (l), including the provisions of special statutes under which bodies have been incorporated with which the public have dealings, and the rights of which may limit the rights of the public (m).

Part II.—Classification and Framework.

SECT. I.—Classification.

Classification.

193. Statutes are generally classified as follows, namely :—

- (1) Public General Acts;
- (2) Local and Personal Acts (including public Acts of a local character); and
- (3) Private Acts (n).

(i) Parliament Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 13), s. 2 (1), (3); by ibid., s. 5, a Bill for confirming a provisional order is also excluded. See, further, title PARLIAMENT, Vol. XXI., pp. 722, 723.

For a modern statement of the principle, see Re Williams, Jones v. Williams (1887), 36 Ch. D. 573, 578; Macmillan & Co. v. Dent, [1907] 1 Ch. 107, 124, C. A. As to the effect of statutory enactments on custom, see title CUSTOM AND USAGES, Vol. X., p. 247.

(l) Certain statutes, in virtue of provisions contained in them, require to be promulgated, as, for instance, the Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 90), s. 3, in British possessions outside the United Kingdom. Apart from such statutory provision, promulgation is unnecessary. For the general principle of "ignorantia juris non excusat," see Carter v. McLaren (1871), L. R. 2 Sc. & Div. 120, 125. English statutes do not apply to the Channel Islands unless especially directed to apply to all the King's dominions or to those islands by name (see title DEPENDENCIES AND COLONIES, Vol. X., p. 573), and in such cases they must be registered by the Royal Courts; see p. 162, post.

(n) See the statutes as published with the Law Reports by the Incorporated Council of Law Reporting. The nomenclature of statutes has altered very much. A distinction between public and private Acts was first drawn in the thirty-first year (1541) of Henry VIII. (Statutes of the Realm, 1810, Introduction, p. xxxiii.). There then came a time when public and general Acts were distinguished from private and special Acts, with the latter being classed local and personal Acts of a public character. As early as 1797 the House of Lords directed a classification of statutes by the King's

194. Public general Acts(o) are those in which the whole community is interested, or which carry out some public purpose, and which originate on the motion of some member of the House in which the Bill is introduced (p).

SECT. I.
CLASSIFICATION.

195. Local and personal, or simply local (q), Acts are Acts procured by local authorities or persons for the purposes of limited areas (r), or by trading companies (s) which desire and require wider powers than can be secured by incorporation under the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (t). They originate in either House by petition (u), and their passage through Parliament is subject to particular rules and procedure (w).

Public
general Acts.
Local and personal Acts.

There is, however, no reason why an Act should not be partly local and partly general, and one which originates either as one or the other may become so in the course of its passage through Parliament (x). It is usual for local and personal Acts to adopt Printer, and in 1801 the House of Commons resolved that he should class general statutes and public local and personal statutes in each session in separate volumes (Richards v. Easto (1846), 15 M. & W. 244, 251; Shepherd v. Sharp (1856), 1 H. & N. 115, 122, Ex. Ch.; R. v. London County Council, [1893] 2 Q. B. 454, C. A., per BOWEN, L.J., at pp. 462, 463). "Local and personal" came to be a term of art; see Cock v. Gent (1843), 12 M. & W. 234; Carr v. Royal Exchange Insurance Co. (1862), 1 B. & S. 956; and, since 1868, local Acts, dropping the addendum "personal," have been printed in separate volumes from public and private Acts, numbered in Roman numerals, and the letter P prefixed to such as are public Acts of a local character. The three classes of statutes mentioned in the text, supra, have been printed in three series since 1849. As to local, personal, and private statutes, see, further, pp. 182 et seq., post. As to the classification of Bills, see title PARLIAMENT, Vol. XXI., pp. 702 et seq.

(o) See note (a), p. 203, post. In R. v. London County Council, supra, BOWEN, L.J., at p. 462, pointed out that the logical division was into "general" and "local and personal," and the term "general" is as far as possible used throughout this title in speaking of "public general" Acts.

(q) There is an official index of these from 1801 to 1899.

(r) For example, Town Improvement Acts (see title LOCAL GOVERNMENT, Vol. XIX., p. 292), and Inclosure Acts (see title COMMONS AND RIGHTS OF COMMON, Vol. IV., pp. 540, 541). Such Acts must be judicially noticed, and have all the operation of public Acts (Aiton v. Stephen (1876), 1 App. Cas. 456, per Lord CAIRNS, L.C., at p. 457). Metropolitan Police Acts have been held not to be local and personal Acts, on the ground that they affect the administration of justice, which touches the whole community (Barnett v. Cox (1846), 9 Q. B. 617; doubted in R. v. London County Council, supra, per BOWEN, L.J., at p. 464).

(s) As, for instance, railway companies and gas and water companies.

(t) 8 Edw. 7, c. 69. As to such companies, see title COMPANIES, Vol. V., pp. 674 et seq.

(u) At one time all legislation originated by petition to the Crown. The formula of the Royal Assent to these petitions, "Le Roy le veult," continues to the present day as the form of assent to Bills; see title PARLIAMENT, Vol. XXI., p. 725.

(w) See ibid., pp. 727 et seq.

(x) As, for instance, the Fires Prevention (Metropolis) Act, 1774 (14 Geo. 3, c. 78), referred to in Re Barker, Ex parte Gorely (1864), 4 De J. & Sm. 477; followed in Sinnott v. Bowden, [1912] 2 Ch. 414; see title INSURANCE, Vol. XVII., p. 542, note (d); see, also, Ingram v. Foote (1701), 1 Ld. Raym. 708; R. v. London County Council, [1893] 2 Q. B. 454, C. A., per Lord ESHER, M.R., at p. 459.

SECT. 1. and incorporate general statutes which experience has shown may be properly made part of them (a).

Classification.

Private personal Acts.

196. Private personal Acts (b) relate to the affairs of individuals, and more especially to names, estates, and divorces. As to these Acts also the procedure pursued is distinctive (c), and the Acts when passed need not necessarily be printed (d).

Other denominative terms.

197. Statutes are also distinguished as follows, namely:—

- (1) Ancient and Modern, the latter comprising those enacted since the first year of Edward III. (e);
- (2) Declaratory and Enacting, the former generally including what are known as codifying and consolidating Acts (f);
- (3) Penal and Remedial (g);

(a) See p. 186, post; titles COMPANIES, Vol. V., pp. 674 et seq.; COMPULSORY PURCHASE OF LAND AND COMPENSATION, Vol. VI., p. 12; GAS, Vol. XV., pp. 310 et seq.

(b) "Private Act" is also used comprehensively to include local and personal Acts; see p. 182, post; title PARLIAMENT, Vol. XXI., pp. 727, 728.

(c) See title PARLIAMENT, Vol. XXI., pp. 728 et seq.

(d) Those dissolving the marriages of individuals domiciled in Ireland are not; but most other private personal Acts have been printed since 1813; see, further, p. 201, post.

(e) The distinction is recognised in Vol. I. of the Statutes Revised. The dividing line at the year 1327 is purely arbitrary. It is commonly said that ancient statutes, being short and tersely expressed, must be liberally interpreted (R. v. Gardner (1837), 6 Ad. & El. 112, per COLERIDGE, J., at p. 118; compare Wilson v. Knubley (1806), 7 East, 128, per Lord ELLENBOROUGH, C.J., at p. 134, speaking of a statute of Edward III. as a very ancient statute when no great precision of language prevailed). If, however, it becomes necessary in the future to construe "ancient" statutes, the ordinary rules of interpretation will probably be applied to them. Wilberforce, Statute Law, p. 215, gives examples of particular persons or species mentioned in ancient statutes being held to represent the classes or genera in which they were included.

(f) For examples of declaratory statutes, see the Merchant Shipping (Seamen's Allotment) Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 8), passed to resolve doubts which had arisen as to the true interpretation of sections of the Merchant Shipping Acts, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60) and 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 48), and the Territorial Waters Jurisdiction Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 73), overruling R. v. Keyn (1876), 2 Ex. D. 63, C. C. R. As to the distinction between codifying and consolidating statutes, see p. 199, post. Prima facie an "enacting" statute modifies the operation of the common law or a previous statute, but it is obvious that even a declaratory statute is for some purposes enactive. See also p. 170, post.

(g) As to penal statutes, see p. 177, post. The broad distinction between penal and remedial statutes is that the former are to be strictly, the latter liberally, construed (Huntingtower (Lord) v. Gardiner (1823), 1 B. & C. 297, 299; see p. 153, post). Thus, in a remedial statute—the Dogs Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 60) (now repealed; see Dogs Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 32))—"cattle" was held to include horses and mares (Wright v. Pearson (1869), L. R. 4 Q. B. 582), whereas under the Black Act, stat. (1722) 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, it had been doubted if this could be so (R. v. Pate (1770), 2 Wm. Bl. 721). The distinction between the two is not so sharply drawn now as formerly (compare Stephenson v. Higginson (1852), 3 H. L. Cas. 638, 686; Nicholson v. Fields (1862), 7 H. & N. 810, per MARTIN, B., at p. 817; Dickenson v. Fletcher (1873), L. R. 9 C. P. 1, 7); and many statutes partake of the nature of both (Bones v. Booth (1778), 2 Wm. Bl. 1226 (Gaming Act, 1710 (9 Anne, c. 19))); Gorton v. Champneys (1823), 1 Bing. 287, 301 (an annuity Act, now repealed)).

- (4) Enabling and Restraining (h);
- (5) Obligatory and Permissive (i);
- (6) Mandatory and Directory (k);
- (7) Affirmative and Negative (l);
- (8) Temporary and Perpetual (m).

SECT. 1.
Classification.

Such divisions are not, however, mutually exclusive, and statutes so termed are not distinguished in form or by particular treatment in their consideration by Parliament. The terms are rather such as have commended themselves to judicial interpreters as aptly describing the predominating objects or methods of particular statutes, which objects are proper to be considered in their construction (n).

198. A proposed legislative enactment before its presentation to Parliament is known as a "Draft Bill." After its introduction into either House and during its passage through Parliament it is known as a "Bill," and its sub-divisions are known as "Clauses." When it receives the Royal Assent it is called an "Act" or "Statute," and its clauses become "Sections" (o).

SECT. 2.—Framework.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Heading or Title.

199. Every statute commences with a heading (p) which consists of the introductory phrase, "An Act to," followed by words briefly

"Draft Bill."
"Bill."
"Clauses."
"Sections."

Heading.

(h) See pp. 153, 196, post.

(i) See pp. 170 et seq., post.

(m) See pp. 157, 158, post. Reference may also be made to adoptive Acts, such as the Town Police Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 89) (see title POLICE, Vol. XXII., p. 488), and the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 53) (see title PUBLIC HEALTH AND LOCAL ADMINISTRATION, Vol. XXIII., p. 364), which only operate when brought into force by an executive order.

(n) It has not been thought necessary here to deal with Money Acts, as to which see title PARLIAMENT, Vol. XXI., pp. 722, 723, 776.

(o) Lord Brougham's Act, stat. (1850) 13 & 14 Vict. c. 21, s. 2 (repealed by the Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), but re-enacted in substance by ibid., s. 8), provided that all Acts should be divided into sections if there were more enactments than one. Previously each separate enactment in a statute had been preceded by the words "Be it enacted," which were thereby rendered unnecessary. The terms "clause" and "section" are, however, somewhat loosely and interchangeably used in forensic arguments and judgments. As to Hybrid Bills and the passage of legislation through Parliament generally, see title PARLIAMENT, Vol. XXI., pp. 703, 704, 729, 744. For forms of Bills and various clauses, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. IX., pp. 169 et seq.; Ilbert's Legislative Methods and Forms, ch. xii.

(p) Originally there were no titles to the Acts, but only a petition and the King's answer; and the judges thereupon drew up the Act into form and then added the title (A.-G. v. Weymouth (Lord) (1743), Amb. 20, per Lord HARDWICKE, L.C., at pp. 22, 23). A title was first used about the eleventh year (1496) of Henry VII. (Chance v. Adams (1696), 1 Ld. Raym. 77). As to the short title of an Act and the Short Titles Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 14), see pp. 202, 203, post. For forms of short title, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. IX., p. 242.

SECT. 2. describing its object. It now forms part of the enacting statute (q), Framework. and may be considered in determining the scope of the enactment (r), provided that nothing contained in it may be taken to contradict clear and unambiguous language in the enactment itself (s).

Date of 200. Appended to the heading is the date on which the statute Royal Assent. received the Royal Assent, which is the date of its commencement (t) unless otherwise provided.

SUB-SECT. 2. — Preamble.

Preamble. 201. Following upon the heading or title comes the preamble (if any), which gives the reasons why the passing of the statute has become desirable (u). The preamble may now be regarded, like (q) "In old days it used not to be so, but now the title is an important part of the Act, and is so treated in both Houses of Parliament" (Fielden v. Morley Corporation, [1899] 1 Ch. 1, C. A., per LINDLEY, M.R., at p. 4; Dartford Rural Council v. Beitley Heath Rail. Co., [1898] A. C. 210, per Lord HALSBURY, L.C., at p. 213; Vacher & Sons, Ltd. v. London Society of Compositors, [1913] A. C. 107, per Lord MOULTON, at pp. 128, 129). This statement must be taken as superseding what has been said by Sir E. COKE in Powtler's Case (1610), 11 Co. Rep. 29 a, 33 b; by HOLT, C.J., in Mills v. Wilkins (1703), 6 Mod. Rep. 62; by Lord MANSFIELD, C.J., in R. v. Williams (1757), 1 Wm. Bl. 93; and in recent times in Birtwhistle v. Vardill (1840), 7 Cl. & Fin. 895, 929, H. L.; Salkeld v. Johnson (1848), 2 Exch. 256, 283; Shrewsbury (Earl) v. Scott (1859), 6 C. B. (N. S.) 1, 215; Claydon v. Green (1868), L. R. 3 C. P. 511, 522; Allkins v. Jups (1876), 2 C. P. D. 375, per GROVE, J., at p. 385; and a title is no longer to be classed with marginal notes and punctuation (see p. 121, post) as mere contemporanea expositio. As to the interpretation of statutes, see pp. 126 et seq., post.

(r) Coomber v. Berks Justices (1882), 9 Q. B. D. 17, 33; Re a Debtor, Ex parte the Debtor, [1903] 1 K. B. 705, 708, C. A. (Money-lenders Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 51)). This, however, does not apply to a short title, which is merely for facility of reference (Vacher & Sons, Ltd. v. London Society of Compositors, supra, at p. 128). The view expressed in Hunter v. Nockolds (1850), 1 Mac. & G. 640, per Lord COTTENHAM, L.C., at p. 651, would hardly now be followed. See, further, Brett v. Brett (1826), 3 Add. 210, 218; Blake v. Midland Rail. Co. (1852), 18 Q. B. 93, 109; Shaw v. Ruddin (1858), 9 I. C. L. R. 214; R. v. Mallow Union Guardians (1860), 12 I. C. L. R. 35; East and West India Dock Co. v. Shaw, Savill and Albion Co. (1888), 39 Ch. D. 524, 531; Kenrick & Co. v. Lawrence & Co. (1890), 25 Q. B. D. 99, 104; A.-G. v. Matgate Pier and Harbour Co., [1900] 1 Ch. 749, 754; compare Fenton v. Thorley, [1903] A. C. 443, per Lord MACNAGHTEN, at p. 447. The Inclosure etc. Expenses Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 89), after mentioning certain Acts in the title, and the usual enacting clause, commences in ibid. s. 1, by the words: "That, notwithstanding any provisions in the said Acts contained" (Wilberforce, Statute Law, p. 276).

(t) Pursuant to the Acts of Parliament (Commencement) Act, 1793 (33 Geo. 3, c. 13), under which the Clerk of the Parliaments indorses on every Act the time at which it receives the Royal Assent, which indorsement is taken to be part of the Act; see title PARLIAMENT, Vol. XXI., pp. 723, 725. As to short titles, see pp. 202, 203, post.

(u) For instances, see Chancery of Lancaster Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 23); Parliament Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 13). For forms of preambles, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. IX., pp. 241, 242.

the title, as part of the statute (w) for the purpose of explaining (a), restraining (b), or even extending (c) enacting words, but not for the purpose of limiting express provisions couched in clear and unambiguous terms (d). SECT. 2.
Framework.

202. Particular sections or groups of sections are sometimes preceded by a preamble, which, to distinguish it from a general preamble, is usually called a "recital" (e). Recitals.

203. As a general rule, modern public general Acts dispense with preambles (f), but private Bills—the term being used in the widest sense (g), as opposed to public general Bills—by the rules of both Houses must have preambles, which must be proved (h). • When preamble
necessary.

204. The repeal of a preamble by a Statute Law Revision Act or Repeal of preamble.

(w) In 1848, though the title was not regarded as part of the law, the preamble had come to be so regarded (Salkeld v. Johnson (1848), 2 Exch.
250, 283).

(a) "The rehearsal or preamble is a good mean to find out the meaning of the statute, and as it were a key to open the understanding thereof" (Co.
Litt. 79 a). "A key to open the meaning of the makers of the Act, and the mischiefs it was intended to remedy" (4 Co. Inst. 330). See also Stowel v.

(e) As in Bryan v. Child (1850), 5 Exch. 368, where POLLOCK, C.B., at
p. 374, held that the introductory recital to a set of clauses in the Bankruptcy Law Consolidation Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 106) (now repealed), must be read as incorporated with each; and see Bristol Corporation v.
Cunning (1906), 95 L. T. 183, where the section of a local Act was held to be explained and limited by a recital immediately preceding it.

(f) One reason being that a preamble appearing on a draft Bill might by alterations in the Bill during its passage through Parliament become inapt in the subsequent Act.

(g) See note (b), p. 116, ante.

(h) See title PARLIAMENT, Vol. XXI., p. 755.

SECT. 2. similar statute will in no way affect the future construction of the Framework. Act (i).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Enacting Formula.

Acts other than Finance Acts.

205. The enacting formula in Acts other than Finance Acts generally runs in the following words: "Be it enacted by the King's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows" (j).

Acts containing a preamble.

Where there is a preamble the word "therefore" is introduced before the word "enacted." In every Bill presented to the Sovereign under the provisions of the Parliament Act, 1911 (k), the words "Lords Spiritual and Temporal" are to be omitted, and the words "in accordance with the provisions of the Parliament Act, 1911," introduced after the words "in this present Parliament assembled" (l).

Finance or Money Bills.

206. In Finance or Money Bills (m) the enacting formula commences with the words "Most Gracious Sovereign, We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in Parliament assembled, towards making good the supply which we have cheerfully granted to Your Majesty in this session of Parliament, have resolved to grant unto Your Majesty the sums hereinafter mentioned, and do therefore most humbly beseech Your Majesty that it may be enacted, and be it enacted" (n).

Not required for every section.

207. It is no longer necessary that each section of a statute commence with the words "And be it enacted," or "And be it further enacted." Every section is a substantive enactment in itself (o).

(i) As, for instance, the repeal of the preamble to the Betting Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 119), by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 19), s. 1, and the Short Titles Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 10) (the latter Act having since been repealed and replaced by the Short Titles Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 14) (Powell v. Kempton Park Racecourse Co., [1897] 2 Q. B. 242, C. A., per A. L. SMITH, L.J., at p. 269).

(k) 1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 13.

(l) Ibid., s. 4 (1). The words "by authority of Parliament" in an Act or charter were formerly held sufficient to make it an Act of Parliament (The Prince's Case (1606), 8 Co. Rep. 1 a, 20 a).

(m) For the definition of a "Money Bill," see title PARLIAMENT, Vol. XXI., p. 776. These Bills must be initiated by a resolution moved by a member of the Government in committee of the whole House; see ibid., pp. 766, 771; May's Parliamentary Practice (11th ed.), pp. 587, 614; and compare Provisional Collection of Taxes Act, 1913 (3 Geo. 5, c. 3), s. 1 (1).

SUB-SECT. 4.—*Heading of Parts.*SECT. 2.
Framework.
Headings of parts.

208. Headings (which are first found in the Clauses Consolidation Acts of 1845) frequently precede clauses of enactments, or fasciculi of clauses (p), applicable to special objects. They govern, and may generally be read before, each of the sections which are ranged under them (q). They are to be regarded as parts of the statute itself, and may be read not only as explaining the sections which immediately follow, but as affording an even better key to the general construction than a mere preamble (r). Further, as being found and sometimes referred to in the enacting parts (s), they are deserving of greater consideration than marginal notes (t). The clear meaning and natural operation of words found in the various sections under headings must, however, according to the general rule, not be restrained or confined by them (u).

SUB-SECT. 5.—Sections.

209. Notwithstanding that every section of a statute is a substantive enactment in itself (a), the statute must be read and construed as a whole, though one section may bear a wider, another a more limited, meaning (b). One section may contain more than one enactment (c).

SUB-SECT. 6.—Marginal Notes, Punctuation, and Brackets.

210. Marginal notes have been referred to as part of a statute when they have been found on the Parliament roll (d); and, as they are now printed with the draft Bill, it cannot be said that the eye of Parliament has never rested on them. The disposition of the courts is, however, to disregard them (e).

SUB-SECT. 7.—Schedules.

Purpose and construction. 212. Schedules (h) which usually contain a list of any statutes repealed, and which for purposes of drafting often contain other matter which may conveniently be separated from the enacting sections, such as treaties or forms, agreements and plans, or machinery, are to be regarded as constituent parts of the statute (i). If there is discrepancy between an enacting part and a schedule, the former prevails (j), and the operation of an enactment is never restrained by reference to a schedule when such restriction is unfavourable to the liberty of a subject (k).

Forms appended in schedule. 213. Forms appended in a schedule to a statute may be referred to for the purpose of throwing light on the construction of the statute (l). If such forms are merely given as models, and by way of example, or for departmental purposes, their bearing on the construction of enacting sections is less (m) than if they form an essential element in the operation of the statute (n).

SUB-SECT. 8.—Statutory Rules and Orders.

216. The tendency of modern legislation is to lay down general principles, and to avoid going into administrative details (s). It is within the competence of Parliament to delegate its authority, as may be seen in the statutes by which constitutions have been granted to the great colonies and dominions (t), and in the powers given in administrative Acts for the making of rules (a), regulations (b), and bye-laws (c), and for the suspensory or operative action of proclamations (d), of Orders in Council (e), and of departmental orders (f).

Control of judiciary.

217. Delegated authority of the kind above referred to must be exercised strictly in accordance with the powers creating it (g), and in the spirit of the enabling statute (h). Statutes of a subordinate legislature, and also rules, ordinances, orders, and bye-laws, which have fulfilled all the conditions precedent to their validity, have the force of statutes, and must be construed as such (i).

218. Statutory rules, orders, and bye-laws differ from statutes in that it may be open to the judiciary to question their validity, to examine if they have complied with conditions precedent (j), and in the case of bye-laws to consider if they are reasonable (k). If they fail to comply with such conditions, the court may quash them or treat them as unenforceable (l).

Where the Act under which rules are made does not come into operation immediately on passing, the rule-making power may be exercised during the interval for the purpose of bringing the Act into operation (m). SECT. 2.
Framework.

219. Words and expressions used in subordinate legislation prima facie have the same meaning as in the statute creating the power of legislation (n). Meaning of words and expression.

220. The power to make any rules, regulations, or bye-laws is, unless the contrary intention appears, to be construed as including a power exercisable in the like manner, and subject to the like consent and conditions, if any, to rescind, revoke, amend, or vary the rules, regulations, or bye-laws (o). Alteration or rescission.

221. General provision has been made by statute for the printing and publication of statutory rules (p), such as, for instance, rules, regulations, or bye-laws, made under any Act of Parliament, which relate to any court in the United Kingdom, or the procedure, practice, costs, or fees therein, or which are made by His Majesty in Council, the Judicial Committee, the Treasury, or any other Government department. The rules must be sent to the King's Printer (q), and numbered, and, unless otherwise ordered, must be printed and sold by him. If the rules are required by statute to be gazetted, this requirement is complied with by a notice in the Gazette that the rules have been made, and of the place where copies of them can be purchased (r). Printing and publication of statutory rules.

222. To meet cases of urgency, provisional rules may be made to come into operation at once, but they are only to continue in force until rules have been made in accordance with the foregoing provisions (s). Provisional rules.

(r) Rules Publication Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 66), s. 3. In order to obtain criticisms before rules are finally made, and to prevent people being taken by surprise, provision is made that, at least forty days before making certain statutory rules, notice of the proposal to make the rules, and of the place where copies of the draft rules may be obtained, is to be published in the London Gazette. During these forty days any public body may obtain copies of such draft rules on payment of a sum not exceeding threepence per folio, and any representations or suggestions made by a public body interested in the matter must be taken into consideration by the rule-making authority before finally settling the rules. These provisions apply to statutory rules which are required to be laid before Parliament, but not to those required to be laid before Parliament for any period before they come into operation; nor do they apply to rules made by the Local Government Board, the Board of Trade, the revenue departments, the Post Office, or rules made by the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries relating to contagious diseases of animals; nor do they apply to Scotland (ibid., s. 1).

(s) Ibid., s. 2. This provision does not give power to make rules, but

SECT. 2.
Framework.
 Scope of meaning of statutory rule.

223. Every exercise of a statutory power by a rule-making authority (t) which is of a legislative, and not of an executive, character, is to be deemed a statutory rule within the meaning of the provisions relating to the publication of draft rules (u).

Part III.—Interpretation.

SECT. 1.—In General.

Function imposed upon courts of justice.

224. The function of interpreting the statute as well as the common law lies with the High Court of Justice, and in the last instance with the House of Lords, and, when a court of supreme authority (r) has once laid down a rule of construction, such rule can only be amended by Parliament itself, legislating by statute (a). For, although a statute may have the effect of undoing that which has been wrought by an earlier statute, no recital in a declaratory statute as to the intention of Parliament in the statute amended can reverse or render void that which has been declared by the courts to have been done rightly under it (b).

While it is the duty of the courts to interpret, they are not entitled to canvass the power of Parliament to make any enactment (c), nor to to provide that rules made in accordance with statutory power shall provisionally come into operation immediately (R. v. Baggallay, Hurlock v. Shinn, R. v. Hedderwick, Morris v. Ashton, [1913] 1 K. B. 290).

In General.

225. The function of interpretation exercised by the High Court extends not merely to the interpretation of statutes strictly so called, but to correcting errors of interpretation made by inferior courts (f), by Government departments in assumed exercise of statutory powers (g), or by bodies to which the right of making rules and bye-laws has been delegated (h). SUB-SECT. 1.—Definitions.

226. The following words and expressions have been defined by the Interpretation Act, 1889 (i):— Words and expressions

Interpretation Act, 1889.

(1) As found in any Act whenever passed: Admiralty, Bank of England, Bank of Ireland, Board of Trade, Charity Commissioners, Commissioners of Woods and Forests, Commissioners of Works, Consular Officer, Ecclesiastical Commissioners, Education Department (j), Lord Chancellor, National Debt Commissioners, (d) Co. Litt. 98 b; The Prince's Case (1605), 8 Co. Rep. 1 a, 18 a; Harrison v. Burwell (1670), 2 Vent. 9, per VAUGHAN, C.J., at p. 10; Stead v. Carey (1843), 1 C. B. 496, 516; *Salkeld v. (h) See p. 123, ante.

(i) 52 & 53 Vict. c. 63. This Act defines some sixty expressions in common use, making them of general application, except where an intention to the contrary appears in the particular statute in which they may be used. Some of these expressions are intended to abbreviate the language of statutes by substituting a convenient short term for a cumbersome legal description, as, for instance, "the Board of Trade" for "the Lords of the Committee for the time being of the Privy Council relating to trade and foreign plantations." Other definitions are intended to secure uniformity in the meaning of certain common terms, and to save their needless repetition in every Act; thus, the definition of "person" in ibid., s. 2 (1), slightly strengthens the common law rule of construction, as to which see Hirst v. West Riding Union Banking Co., [1901] 2 K. B. 560, C. A. (Statute of Frauds Amendment Act, 1828 (9 Geo. 4, c. 14), s. 6); and see Pearks, Gunston and Tee, Ltd. v. Ward, Hennen v. Southern Counties Dairy Co., [1902] 2 K. B. 1. The Act does not, however, necessarily alter the common law (Bebb v. Law Society (1913), 29 T. L. R. 634).

(j) Now the Board of Education; see title EDUCATION, Vol. XII., p. 8.

SECT. 2.
Statutory Provisions.

Postmaster-General, Privy Council, Queen Anne's Bounty, Secretary of State, Treasury (k); Assizes, Court of Appeal, Court of Assize, Court of Summary Jurisdiction, High Court, Petty Sessional Court, Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, Summary Jurisdiction (England or English) Acts, Summary Jurisdiction Acts, Supreme Court (l); Writing (m); Statutory Declaration (n); Crown, Sovereign (o); Commencement of Act (p);

(2) As found in any Act or Order of Council passed or made after 1846: County Court (q);

(3) As found in any Act passed after 1850: Affidavit, Land, Month, Oath (r); Masculine Words and Plural and Singular Words (s);

(4) As found in any Act passed after 1866: Parish (t).

(5) As found in any Act passed between 1850 and 1890 (exclusive): County (u);

(6) As found in any Act coming into operation after 1889: Board of Guardians, Poor Law Union (v); Borough, Municipal Borough and Parliamentary Borough (w); British India, British Islands, British Possession, Colonial Legislature, Colony, Governor of India, Legislature (x); Local Government Register of Electors, Parliamentary Register of Electors, Parliamentary Election (y); Person (z); Rules of Court (a); Service by Post (b); Committed for Trial (c); Financial Year (d);

(7) As used in the Act itself: "Act" (e).

Words and

other statutes.

227. A few other definitions of general application are given by other Acts: for example, the expression "England" when used in any Act of Parliament includes Wales and the town of Berwick-upon-Tweed (f); and references to "attorneys" before the Solicitors Act, 1877 (g), stand as references to solicitors of the Supreme Court (h). SUB-SECT. 3.—Measurement of Distance and Time.

Measurement of distance.

229. In the measurement of any distance for the purposes of any statute passed since 1889, that distance, unless the contrary intention appears, must be measured in a straight line on a horizontal plane (a).

Measurement of time.

230. Any expression of time found in a statute must, in the case of Great Britain, be taken to refer to Greenwich time (b).

The law does not, in general, regard fractions of a day, but cases may arise where the object of a statute will be defeated unless the precise hour of an occurrence is noted (c).

SUB-SECT. 4.—General Rules.

Imported meanings.

231. Words importing the masculine gender primâ facie include females, and words in the singular primâ facie include the plural and words in the plural the singular (d).

Service by post.

232. Where any statute passed since 1889 authorises or requires any document to be served by post, whether the expression "serve" or any equivalent expression is used, then, unless the contrary intention appears, service is deemed to be effected by properly addressing, prepaying, and posting a letter containing the document, and, unless the contrary is proved, to have been effected at

But "sunset" in the Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 85 (1) (a), as to carriages carrying lights between one hour after sunset and one hour before sunrise, was held by a divisional court not to be an expression of time within the Act (*Gordon v. 233. Where any statute passed since 1889 confers a power or imposes a duty, then, unless a contrary intention appears, the power may be exercised and the duty performed from time to time as occasion requires (f), and, when the power is so conferred or the duty imposed on the holder of an office as such, it may be exercised or performed by the holder for the time being of the office (g).

SUB-SECT. 5.—Interpretation Clauses.

234. Most modern statutes contain an interpretation clause (h), wherein is declared the meaning which certain words and expressions are to, or may, bear for the purposes of the statute in question (i). As a rule, it should be used for interpreting words which are ambiguous or equivocal only, and not so as to disturb the meaning of such as are plain (k).

Interpretation clauses are often inserted ex abundanti cautela, and are not necessarily to be construed as positive enactments (l).

down from early times. It has been said that their meaning is primarily to be sought in themselves (m), by which it is to be understood that all the constituent parts above dealt with (n), so far as they may be regarded as matter which has received the sanction of Parliament, are to be duly weighed. It has been further said that their grammatical and ordinary sense is mainly to be regarded (o). If the collocation of enacting words is in itself precise and unambiguous, no difficulty arises (p); if the terms employed are ambiguous, then the intention of Parliament must be sought first in the statute itself (q), then in other legislation and contemporaneous circumstances (r), and finally in the general rules laid down by Sir E. SECT. 3.
Common
Law Rules.

236. The great difficulty in all cases is in applying these rules to the particular case (x). A reasonable construction should, if possible (a), prevail, and it must not be assumed that Parliament foresees every result which may accrue from the use of a particular word (b); yet effect must be given to every part of the statute (c), even if the consequence be a hardship upon individuals (d).

Application
of rules of construction.

237. The canons of construction to be imposed with regard to statutes do not, in effect, differ from those applicable to all documents (e).

238. It is convenient to consider for purposes of interpretation the following matters, namely:—

Matters to be

- (1) The words employed;
- (2) The words as collocated in an enacting section;
- (3) Enacting sections as making up a whole statute;
- (4) The whole statute, including the non-enacting constituent parts, which, according to the rules before laid down (f), may be referred to for the purpose of ascertaining the scope and meaning;

and, having thus examined a statute as a self-contained entity, to point out what recourse has been had to external matters when interpretation from within has failed.

Words construed in popular sense.

239. Words are primarily to be construed in their popular sense (g), and as they would have been understood the day after the statute was passed (h), unless such construction would lead to manifest and gross absurdity (i).

Terms of art.

• Terms of art, however, must be taken in their technical or legal sense (k), especially in a penal enactment (l), although the result of this may be that, in statutes applying to the whole of the United Kingdom, words used in different senses in different parts of it may have to be construed in a sense peculiar to one part (m).

Technical use.

When a word is capable of being construed either in its popular sense or as a word of art, it is for those who assert that it is used in a technical, and not in a popular, sense to establish the fact (n).

240. It is generally necessary in determining the sense of a particular word to have regard to the sentence or section in which it is contained (o). If the sense can be so determined, then recourse need not be had to its use in other sections of the statute (p) or in other statutes (q).

SECT. 3.
Common Law Rules.
Collocation of words.

241. As a general rule a word is to be considered as used throughout a statute in the same sense (r). It may happen, however, that the same word is used in different senses in the same section (s), and, a fortiori, in different sections of the same statute (t).

Use in different senses.

242. Where in the same statute, and in relation to the same subject-matter, different words are used, prima facie the alteration has been made intentionally (a).

Use of different words.

243. As a word is primarily to be construed in its literal and popular sense, so an enacting section is to be understood according to the ordinary meaning of the words composing it (b). The only exceptions to this rule are where some other section in the statute shows that the ordinary meaning is to be enlarged (c) or cut

Meaning of enacting section.

(o) Rosse (Earl) v. Wainman (1845), 14 M. & W. 859, 872. It will often be easy to interpret a word by finding out from the context what it does not mean (A.-G. v. Sillem (1863), 2 H. & C. 431, per POLLOCK, C.B., at p. 515).

(q) Macbeth & Co. v. Chislett, [1910] A. C. 220, 223. On the whole it is true, however, to say that the meaning of particular words in Acts of Parliament, as in other instruments, is to be found not so much in a strict etymological propriety of language, nor even in popular use, as in the subject or occasion on which they are used, and the object that is intended to be attained; see R. v. Hall (1822), 1 B. & C. 123, per ABBOTT, C.J., at p. 136; Graham v. Ewart (1856), 1 H. & N. 550, 563, Ex. Ch.; Rein v. Law (1867), L. R. 2 Q. B. 144, 150, 151; Edinburgh Street Tramways Co. v. Torbain (1877), 3 App. Cas. 58, 68; The Dunelm (1884), 9 P. D. 164, 171, C. A. Thus, "bicycle" has for purposes of the Highway Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), s. 78, been held to be a carriage (Taylor v. Goodwin (1879), 4 Q. B. D. 228); see also titles HIGHWAYS, STREETS, AND BRIDGES, Vol. XVI., p. 64, note (d); STREET AND AERIAL TRAFFIC, pp. 277, note (d), 335, post.

(t) Even an interpretation clause (as to which see, further, p. 131, ante) does no more than say that the words interpreted shall have a particular meaning, unless there be something repugnant in the context (Meux v. Jacobs (1875), L. R. 7 H. L. 481, per LORD SELBORNE, at p. 493).

(a) Brighton Guardians v. Strand Union Guardians, [1891] 2 Q. B. 156, C. A., per LORD ESHER, M.R., at p. 167. A similar rule is applicable where two statutes dealing with the same subject-matter use different language (Dickenson v. Fletcher (1873), L. R. 9 C. P. 1, 8); but see p. 139, post.

down (d), or where its literal construction would be repugnant to the general purview (c). For the primary meaning is not always the parliamentary meaning, and any construction which leads to absurd results or produces injustice should if possible be avoided (f).

244. When a rule or enactment is capable of more than one interpretation, and no light is to be derived from the rules applicable to the construction of it a priori, the consequences of alternative interpretations must be regarded (g).

245. Notwithstanding that each section of a statute is to be regarded as a substantive enactment (h), the statute must be read and construed as a whole (i), though one section may bear a wider, another a more limited, meaning (k). Rules made under a statute which are to be observed as if they were enacted in the statute may also be considered for the purpose of construing it (l).

246. Where two co-ordinate sections are apparently inconsistent an effort must be made to reconcile them (m). If this is impossible the later will generally override the earlier (n); but a particular enactment, wherever found, must be construed strictly as against a general provision (o).

J. 196; Re St. Pancras (Parish), R. v. Poor Law Commissioners (1837), 6 Ad. & El. 1, per COLERIDGE, J., at pp. 7, 8. Interpretation clauses frequently extend the natural meaning; thus, "new street" may include old highways (Robinson v. Barton-Eccles Local Board (1883), 8 App. Cas. 798).

247. Among the parts of a statute which must be considered in arriving at its true meaning are the sections or parts of sections known as provisos, exceptions, and saving clauses.

SECT. 3.
Common Law Rules.
Provisos.

A proviso excepts out of a previous section, or out of the earlier part of the section which contains it, something which but for it would have been within the enacting part (p). It is generally something engrafted and dependent on a main enactment (q), and when the enactment is repealed the proviso falls with it (r).

An enacting power cannot in general be implied from the language of a proviso (s), and provisos are frequently inserted in statutes not to impose liability, but to allay fears (t). The substance, and not the form, must, however, be looked at, and that which is in form a proviso may in substance be a fresh enactment, adding to and not merely qualifying that which goes before (a).

248. While a proviso follows the enacting part of a section, and is in a way independent of it, an exception is part of it. Hence where there is an exception co-extensive with, and therefore repugnant to, the enactment, it must be ignored for contrariety (b). A proviso in similar circumstances might, so far as relates to cases falling within it, repeal a foregoing enactment (c).

Exceptions.

249. Exceptions and reservations are strictly construed, and affirmative rights cannot be based upon them unless by necessary implication (d).

provisions contained in the same or an incorporated statute are to be regarded as exceptions out of the general provisions (c).

An exception out of the provisions of a general statute may be ground whence an intention may be implied to repeal a statutory provision which would, if not repealed, have excepted the particular matter expressly excepted (f).

Saving
clauses.

250. Saving clauses may be inserted where one statute is repealed and re-enacted by another, the scope and purport of both remaining the same. Their effect is that portions of the repealed statute remain in force as if the second statute had not been passed; and, unlike exceptions from an enacting clause, they are liberally construed (g).

A saving clause repugnant to the body of a statute is void (h). It can only preserve things which were in esse at the time of its enactment (i), and therefore cannot affect transactions which were complete at the date of the repealing statute (k).

A saving clause in a general statute will cease to operate if it is inconsistent with the operation of a subsequent special statute (l).

The insertion of words in a statute protecting or excepting certain persons does not necessarily by implication exclude others. Many things find their way into saving clauses ex abundanti cautela and upon the insistence of particular bodies of persons (m).

(iii.) Other Statutes.

Statutes in pari materia.

Where two Acts passed within three weeks of each other contained two inconsistent clauses, the court treated the latter as an exception out of the provisions of the former; see Hunter v. Nockolds (1850), 1 Mac. & G. 640.

(f) See Re Williams, Jones v. Williams (1887), 36 Ch. D. 573, where it was held that the Trustee Savings Banks Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 87), s. 14, giving a bank priority in the distribution of the assets of an insolvent actuary, has been repealed by the Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 40, because that expressly reserves and excepts rights arising out of the Friendly Societies Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 60), and stat. construction (o). It is difficult to define with precision what constitutes being in pari materia (p), but series of statutes dealing with a particular subject, such as the Bankruptcy Acts, the poor laws, the game laws, and so forth, are naturally regarded as making each so many separate systems; and the Short Titles Act, 1896 (q), has grouped many such systems under collective titles. An explanatory or declaratory Act is naturally confined to the same subject-matter as that which it explains (r).

SECT. 3.
Common
Law Rules.

252. It may be presumed that in statutes in pari materia similar language is to be similarly interpreted (s), though change of language is not conclusive that change of interpretation is intended (t), more particularly having regard to the frequency of slovenly draftsmanship (u). Moreover, a later statute may be intended to enlarge and not merely to explain or consolidate (b). Principles of interpretation.

253. The comparison of a statute with those in pari materia affords a useful aid in resolving doubts in the following cases, namely:— Comparison of the statute.

• (1) When the question is how far, if at all, an earlier statute has been repealed by a later;

(2) When difficulties arise out of apparently conflicting language in statutes concurrently in operation;

(3) When words are susceptible of divers constructions, one of which may be recommended and others repelled by considerations derived from the policy of the law as declared in other statutes dealing with the same subject (c).

SECT. 3.
Common Law Rules.

Earlier
statutes.

254. Apart from a clause of reference, the earlier of two statutes in pari materiâ cannot, strictly speaking, be construed by what is enacted in the later one (d). Regard may be had, however, to a repealed statute in pari materiâ where difficulties of construction arise (e); and where a statute incorporates a section of an earlier statute and directs it to apply as if certain words were omitted therefrom, the incorporated section is not to be construed as if the deleted words had never existed therein (f).

Express incorporation.

255. Sections of an earlier statute may be incorporated into a later one by an express provision contained in the former (g).

A statute containing a general clause of reference to statutes in pari materiâ incorporates the general powers and provisions of the latter, but not special provisions, such as a right of appeal (h); a fortiori, the powers conferred by a principal Act are read into an amending Act (i). A single section of an earlier statute incorporated with a later statute may lay all the other sections of the earlier statute open as a field of interpretation of that section, although they are not incorporated (k).

Repealed
statutes.

256. When a statute repeals earlier statutes upon the same subject, the repealed statutes cannot be resorted to for the purpose of bringing within the purview of the new statute anything omitted therefrom (l).

Statutes
excluded.

257. Express reference to a particular statute may by necessary inference exclude from consideration statutes in pari materiâ (m).

Statutes in pari materiâ must generally be carefully distinguished from those alio intuitu, to which the foregoing rules do not apply (n).

(e) R. v. Lordale (1758), 1 Burr. 445, 447; Re Copeland, Ex parte Copeland (1852), 2 De G. M. & G. 914, 920, C. A.; A.-G. v. Lamplough (1878), 3 Ex. D. 214, 227, C. A.

(f) Thus, the meaning of "voluntary" in the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 12), s. 38, as amended by Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 7), s. 11, must be considered, although for the purposes of the Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 2 (c), it is to be excluded (A.-G. v. Smyth, [1905] 2 I. R. 553).

(g) Thus, the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), is incorporated into subsequent statutes which involve the compulsory taking of land (Re Wood's Estate, Ex parte Works and Buildings Commissioners (1886), 31 Ch. D. 607, 615, C. A.); see title COMPULSORY PURCHASE OF LAND AND COMPENSATION, Vol. VI., pp. 12, 13. (iv.) Contemporaneous Circumstances.

SECT. 3.

Common Law Rules.

• 258. In construing a statute regard may be had to the exact state of the law, and generally to all circumstances which can be proved by extrinsic evidence to have surrounded Parliament at the time it was passed (o); for ignorance of the circumstances which rendered the passing of a statute necessary cannot be imputed to Parliament (p).

Contemporaneous circumstances.

259. In the construction of ancient statutes it is proper also to consider the general state of contemporary public sentiment, and in the construction of remedial statutes to consider the evils they were proposed to redress (q). For this purpose recourse may be had to annals or histories of the period and to antiquarian researches (r).

Contem-
sentiment.

260. Light may be thrown on the scope of a statute by looking at what Parliament was doing contemporaneously, and at the history of the statute (s); but even when words in a statute are so ambiguous that they may be construed in more than one sense, regard may not be had to the Bill by which it was introduced (t), nor to what has been said in Parliament (a) or elsewhere (b).

Common
Law Rules.

Informalities in passing statute.

261. A statute which has received the sanction of Parliament cannot be impeached for informalities preceding its enactment, even if its passing has been procured by fraud (c). Parliament alone can provide a remedy (d), and it is immaterial that persons whose rights are affected thereby have not received notice of the Bill introducing it, and that the Standing Orders of either or both Houses have not been complied with (e).

Public policy. 262. In the construction of a statute the policy which dictated the statute may be taken into account (f), but not public policy in general, and the danger of taking account of public policy has been frequently pointed out (g).

(v.) Previously Accepted Interpretation.

Words and phrases previously interpreted.

263. It is to be assumed that Parliament knows the law (h), even in technical matters (i). Where, therefore, words and expressions in a statute are plainly taken from earlier statutes in pari materia which have received judicial interpretation, it must be assumed that Parliament was aware of such interpretation, and intended it to be followed in later enactments (k), even, apparently, though the court had been forced to do violence to the primary meaning and grammatical construction of words (l). This rule is especially applicable in the case of consolidating Acts (m).

SECT. 3.
Common
Law Rules.

While knowledge of the law as defined by statute, and as interpreted by the courts, may be attributed to Parliament, it must not be taken to have knowledge of the habitual neglect of duty by those upon whom statutory duties are thrown (n).

264. Where legislation, supervening on a practice which has grown up and become generally recognised, repeats words on which the practice was founded, it may be inferred that Parliament intends those words to be understood in their previously accepted meaning (o).

Previous
practice.

265. Where expressions of larger meaning are used in an amending statute than in the principal Act, it must be taken that they are used intentionally (p). Where, however, a statute of limited operation is repealed by one which re-enacts its provisions in an amended form, it need not be presumed that its operation was to be extended to classes of persons hitherto not subject to them (q).

Extension of meaning.

If the words of a later statute differ from those of an earlier statute, the court, in construing the later statute, is not bound by a decision under the earlier one, even though it relates to the same subject-matter (r).

266. An interpretation which has long been acted on will not be disregarded by a court of law (s); nor will a construction long acquiesced in be lightly overruled by a court of review (t).

267. Where a statute, speaking on some points, is silent as to others, practice may supply the defect, especially if statutory directions are given and the practice is not inconsistent with them. Where a statute uses language of doubtful import, the action taken under it, if continued for a long course of years, may reduce uncertainty to a fixed rule (a).

The court may have regard to the construction put upon a statute when it first came into force (b). Contemporanea expositio, however, means unanimous consent over a long unbroken period, and can rarely be applied to modern statutes (c).

268. Usage cannot prevail if the language of the statute is clear (d), and the consideration of practice as a key to interpretation must be distinguished from usage as a proof of right (e). Casual admissions of liability under a statute cannot be called in aid (f). The court may, however, have regard not only to the precise words of the statute, but also to the practice which existed at the time it was passed (g).

269. A court of first instance in this country follows an interpretation unanimously placed upon a statute by the Court of Session in Scotland, where the question is simply one that turns Lord HERSCHELL, L.C., concurred in the view expressed by BLACKBURN, J., in an earlier case, that until Parliament interfered, *R. v. upon the construction of a statute which extends to Scotland as well as to England (h). Unless there is some controlling reason to the contrary, the interpretation in both countries should be the same (i).

SECT. 3.

(vi.) General Words after Particular Words.

270. As a rule, general words following specific words are limited to things ejusdem generis with those before enumerated (k), although this, as a rule of construction, must be controlled by another equally general rule, that statutes ought, like wills or other documents, to be construed so as to carry out the objects sought to be accomplished by them (l). Hence the same general words would receive a wider interpretation in a remedial than in a penal enactment (m).

Ejusdem generis rule.

271. Where difficulty arises in deciding what further particular objects may fall within the same genus as the particular ones preceding the general words, the intendment of the statute and the non-applicability of the general words to particular species of the genus must be considered (n).

Thus, when the statute (1740) 14 Geo. 2, c. 6, made it felony to steal sheep or other cattle, it was thought necessary to specify in a declaratory Act (stat. (1741) 15 Geo. 2, c. 34) what cattle were intended (E. v. Paly (1770), 2 Win. Bl. 721; Fletcher v. Sondes (Lord) (1826), 3 Bing. 501, 580, II. L.). See also *Scales v. Comparison of terms.

272. Where several words are followed by a general expression, which is as much applicable to the first and other words as to the last, that expression is not, as a matter of ordinary construction, limited to the last, but applies to all (o).

273. It is often possible to arrive at the meaning of sweeping general words, which it is difficult to apply in their literal sense, by comparing them with words of like import in the same statute (p).

(vii.) Mistakes in Statutes.

Mistakes and omissions.

274. It is not competent to any court to proceed upon the assumption that Parliament has made a mistake, there being a strong presumption that Parliament does not make mistakes (q); and, as a rule, it is not permissible to supply omissions, even though they are evidently unintentional (r).

*Ut res magis
pereat.*

If it is possible, the words of a statute must be construed so as to give a sensible meaning to them, ut res magis valeat quam pereat (s). Where the main object and intention of a statute are clear from the title, preamble, or otherwise, it should not be reduced to a nullity by a literal following of language, which may be due to want of skill or knowledge on the part of a draftsman, unless such language is intractable (t).

Thus, it may be possible in certain circumstances:—

(1) To treat as rectified obvious misprints (a);

(1852), 7 Exch. 768, 774. It has been laid down that the general words of a statute beginning with inferior persons do not extend to superior persons. Thus, in stat. (1571) 13 Eliz. c. 10, "colleges, deans and chapters, parsons, vicars, and others having spiritual promotions" do not include bishops; and when stat. (1539) 31 Hen. 8, c. 13, speaks of property coming to the Crown by dissolution, renouncing, forfeiture etc., "or by any other means," an Act of Parliament, which is the highest form of conveyance, not having been specified, cannot be intended (Canterbury's Archbishop Case (1596), 2 Co. Rep. 46 a).

(o) See Great Western Rail. Co. v. Swindon and Cheltenham Rail. Co. (1884), 9 App. Cas. 787, where "lands" in a definition clause being declared to extend to messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, of any tenure, the words "of any tenure" were held to define the four preceding substantives; and Lord BRAMWELL added, at p. 808, that in "horses, oxen, pigs, and sheep, from whatever country they may come," the latter words would apply to horses as much as to sheep; see also R. v. Cambridgeshire Justices (1835), 4 Ad. & El. 111, 119.

(a) Thus, an intention to repeal part of the Frauds by Workmen Act, 1777 (17 Geo. 3, c. 56), was implied from stat. (1818) 58 Geo. 3, c. 51, although the latter statute, in setting out the title of the former, stated it

- (2) To reject words or phrases as surplusage (b);
- (3) To supply omitted words or expressions (c);
- (4) To substitute one word for another (d);
- (5) To read negative words as affirmative, or affirmative as negative (e); disjunctive as conjunctive (f), and vice versa (g);
- (6) To put upon words a sense possible but not usually attributable to them (h);
- (7) To expand their literal meaning (i).

Common Law Rules.

Duty of judges.

276. It is the duty of judges to give fair and full effect to statutes without regard to the particular consequence in the special case (l), and not to indulge in conjecture as to what Parliament would have done if a particular case had been presented to its notice (m); for it may be presumed that the framers of a statute contemplated matters of ordinary occurrence (n).

Conditions precedent.

277. A condition precedent clearly imposed must be performed before a statutory power can take effect, and that though the power has been treated as operative for many years, and even recognised as existing by subsequent statutes (o).

(ii.) What may be Implied.

Presumptions. 278. In determining what is intended to be the scope of a statute it may be presumed—

- (4) That it was not intended that a man should benefit from his own wrong (s); or benefit where he has been in fault (t).

SECT. 3.
Common
Law Rules.

279. When it is clear from the nature of a provision that some restriction must be put upon the literal signification of the words used, and it is uncertain from anything to be found in the statute itself what the exact character and extent of the restriction should be, no greater restrictions should be imposed than are rendered necessary by the nature of the statute and its subject-matter (a).

Restrictions.

280. Ubi aliquid conceditur, conceditur etiam et id sine quo res ipsa non esse potest. A duty imposed or a power granted by Parliament carries with it the power necessary for its performance or execution (b). Similarly, an authority given by statute to do certain work authorises the doing not only of all things absolutely necessary for its execution, but of all things reasonably necessary (c). This is especially the case with enabling Acts (d).

Powers
implied.

281. It may be presumed:

- (1) That words are not used in a statute without a meaning (e);
- (2) Nor omitted, when they have been used in a corresponding clause in an earlier statute, without a reason (f).

Language of statutes.

(iii.) What must be Expressed.

Derogation from common law rights.

283. Statutes which limit or extend common law rights must be expressed in clear unambiguous language (h). Such are:—

- (1) Those which detract from rights of ownership (i);
- (2) Those which impose a new obligation (k);
- (3) Fiscal or rating enactments (l);
- (4) Those which interfere with existing contracts (m);
- (5) Those which affect status (n), or personal privileges (o);

 (11) Those which modify the rules of public meetings (u);
 (12) Those which give a right of appeal (a);
 (13) Those which introduce new principles into any branch of the law (b);

The fact that a statute may restrict common law rights is, however, no reason why, when the language is clear, it should be construed differently from other statutes (c).

(iv.) Construction of General Provisions.

284. General words must receive a general construction, unless there is in the statute itself some ground for restricting their meaning (d). The fact that general words are used in a statute is not in itself, however, a conclusive reason why every case falling literally within them should be governed by it (e). General words.

SECT. 3.
Common
Law Rules.

capable of extending in their application to the whole of a statute do not necessarily so extend (f).

General words are not to be so construed as to alter the common law, or the previous policy of the law, if a sense or meaning can be applied to them consistent with the intention of preserving the existing policy untouched (g).

Prohibitions.

285. Where a statute enacts a prohibition in general terms, more extensive than a recital, its words must have their full and natural effect; if, however, the case under consideration is not plainly within the mischief intended to be prevented, it is permissible to restrain the effect of the enactment by a previous recital (h).

*Expressio
unius.*

286. The method of construction summarised in the maxim expressio unius exclusio alterius cannot be applied without limitation (i), for a failure to make an expressio complete may easily arise from the accidents of parliamentary procedure, and it is common to put provisions into statutes, particularly private statutes, ex abundanti cautela, and at the instance of parties interested (j).

Statutes
applying to England and Scotland.

287. A general statute applying to both England and Scotland, using terms of art which have different meanings in the two countries, may prima facie be treated differently in the courts of each (k); hence in respect of certain terms statutory provision has been made as to their respective meanings when used in relation to England, Scotland, or Ireland (l). The meaning of legal expressions in the law of the country to which they properly belong may show what Parliament intended to be the meaning in the sister country (m).

(v.) Benevolent Interpretation.

SECT. 3.
Common Law Rules,
Liberal
construction.

288. Judicial interpretation should be directed to avoiding consequences which are inconvenient and unjust, if this can be done without violence to the spirit or the language of a statute (n). In advancement of a remedial statute everything is to be done that can be done consistently with a proper construction of it (o), even though it may be necessary to extend enacting words beyond their natural import and effect (p). This principle is applied where the intention of Parliament is not clear (q), or its language is capable of two constructions (r).

It has been laid down that a liberal construction is to be given to general statutes which provide for the maintenance of religion, the advancement of learning, and the relief of the poor (a), and to saving clauses introduced into repealing statutes for the purpose of protecting persons from the consequences of acts done under the statutes repealed (b).

289. The principle that "an Act of late time shall be taken within the equity of an Act made long time before" (c) is still unimpaired, and a power of jointuring created before the Statute of Devises, 1540 (d), may be properly exercised by will (e). Vernon's Case.

Ross* (1890), 24 Q. B. D. 381, 389, C. A. Construction by the equity, or the extension of decisions beyond the enacting words, so long as they were within the mischief or cause of making (Co. Litt. 24 b), was common with regard to earlier statutes (Hay v. Perth (Lord Provost and Magistrates) (1863), 4 Macq. 535, 544, H. L.); but the courts always required to be satisfied that plain words did not stand in the way, and such construction or extension is now generally out of use (Atcheson v. Everitt (1776), 1 Cowp. 382, 391, H. L.; Brandling v. Barrington (1827), 6 B. & C. 467, 475; Shuttleworth v. Le Fleming (1865), 19 C. B. (N. S.) 687, 703). SECT. 3.

Common Law Rules.Substitution or addition.(vi.) Provisions Affecting Jurisdiction.

290. It is a question of construction whether a statute directly, or by necessary implication, takes away a right of procedure by substituting another, or leaves the former right co-existing with the latter (f). This question may be tested by inquiring whether the substituted procedure is a complete one, and whether it gives the parties interested in invoking it the same rights of being heard as they formerly possessed (g).

Lex fori.

291. Where power is given by statute to take proceedings in different courts, the remedy is subject to the lex fori of the court in which it is taken, as, for instance, the limit of time within which the remedy must be sought (h).

Inferior courts.

292. Statutory provisions giving jurisdiction to inferior courts, to Government departments, or to bodies created ad hoc, must be strictly construed (i), and the procedure prescribed must be exactly followed (k).

(vii.) *Consistency with International Law.*Extra-territorial jurisdiction.

293. There is a presumption that Parliament does not assert or assume jurisdiction which goes beyond the limits established by the common consent of nations. On the principles already stated (l), however, this presumption must give way before an intention clearly expressed (m).

Comity of nations.

294. Statutes are to be interpreted, provided that their language admits, so as not to be inconsistent with the comity of nations (n).

approving Vernon's Case (1572), 4 Co. Rep. 1 a, 4 a. The leading characteristic of this extension of statutes by inference to include cases not originally contemplated is that the earlier statute deals with a genus within which a new species is brought by a subsequent Act (R. v. Smith (1870), L. R. 1 C. C. R. 266, per Bovill, C.J., at p. 270). As to powers of jointuring, see title POWERS, Vol. XXIII., pp. 80 et seq.

(g) Brockwell v. Bullock, supra, per FRY, L.J., at p. 575.

(h) Thus, where a local Act enacted that paving expenses should be recoverable from frontagers either in a court of summary jurisdiction, or by action in the High Court, it was held that in the latter case the action need not be brought within six months, (Blackburn Corporation v. Sanderson, [1902] 1 K. B. 794, C. A., followed in Metropolitan Water Board v. Bunn, [1913] 1 K. B. 134); and see title HIGHWAYS, STREETS, AND BRIDGES, Vol. XVI., pp. 223 et seq.

International law, however, being mainly conventional, can, it seems, only be administered by the courts when it forms part of the law of this country (o). If, therefore, statutory enactments are clearly inconsistent with international law, they must be so construed, whatever the effect upon the rights of aliens not within the jurisdiction may be (p).

SECT. 3.
Common
Law Rules.

295. The statute law of a foreign country, when relevant and not repugnant to the law of this country or to natural justice, may be proved and given effect to by the courts of this country (q), excepting in the case of statutes imposing penalties (r) or liabilities or disqualifications in the nature of penalties (s), and fiscal laws (t). On the same principle the wills of foreigners executed in accordance with the law of the country in which they are domiciled are admitted to probate (u), and foreigners sojourning in British dominions may avail themselves generally of British statutes (w).

Part IV.—Operation.

SECT. 1.—Commencement and Duration.

296. The expression "commencement" used with reference to a statute means the time at which the statute comes into operation (c), which, where no other time is provided, is the commencement of the day upon which it receives the Royal Assent (a). Any statute passed after 1889, or any Order in Council, order, warrant,

SECT. 1. scheme, letters patent, rules, regulations, or bye-laws made, granted, or issued under a power conferred by statute, if expressed to come into operation on a particular day, must be construed as coming into operation immediately on the expiration of the previous day (b).

Passing of Act.

The expression "passing of the Act" refers to the date at which the Royal Assent is given, and not necessarily to the commencement of its operation (c).

The commencement of a statute may vary as regards different places or as regards its various provisions (d).

Earlier exercise of powers.

297. A statute passed since 1889, which is not to come into operation immediately on its passing (e), may, nevertheless, confer powers to be exercised for the purpose of bringing it into operation at the appointed time (f). Such powers may, unless a contrary

(b) Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 36 (2). The result is that an Act of Parliament, or Order in Council, which is expressed to come into operation on the 1st January, takes effect immediately after the clock has struck midnight on the 31st December. Before 1793, Acts of Parliament, in which the contrary was not expressed, came into operation as from the first day in the session in which they were passed, because by a legal fiction a session, like an assize, was deemed to constitute a single day (Panter v. A.-G. (1772), 6 Bro. Parl. Cas. 486). This led to difficulties, for the judges had to take judicial cognisance of the first day of the session, instead of being able to take the day of the passing from the authorised copy of the Act itself (R. v. Wilde (1670), 1 Lev. 296; Lattless v. Holmes (1792), 4 Term Rep. 660); and a man might be convicted of an offence which had not in fact been created by statute at the time it was committed (R. v. Bailey (1800), Russ. & Ry. 1; R. v. Middlesex Justices (1831), 2 B. & Ad. 818, 821). As to retrospective effect, see pp. 159, 160, post.

(c) Re Dalzell, Ex parte Rushleigh (1875), 2 Ch. D. 9, C. A., followed in R. v. Smith (1909), 26 T. L. R. 23, C. C. A. (operation of Prevention of Crime Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 59)). In Burn v. Carvalho (1834), 1 Ad. & El. 883, 896, Ex. Ch., it was pointed out that the Civil Procedure Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42), s. 44, provided that it should commence and take effect on the 1st June, 1833, although it did not receive the Royal Assent until the 14th August following. It is apprehended that the Act would be without statutory force until the later of the two dates, when it might have a retrospective operation, a result quite permissible in Acts regulating procedure (Re Athlumney, Ex parte Wilson, [1898] 2 Q. B. 547); see p. 161, post.

(d) For instances, see the Sunday Closing (Wales) Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 61), which was to come into operation in each magisterial division on the day next appointed for the holding of the general annual licensing meeting for that division; Licensing Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7, c. 28), s. 21, which came into operation four years and three months after the rest of the Act; Education Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7, c. 42), s. 27 (2), which enabled the Board of Education to appoint different days for different purposes and for different provisions of the Act and for different councils. The formula of a commencement clause usually runs: "This Act (save as otherwise expressly provided) shall come into operation on" a named day, which is in most cases the 1st January. But, as the financial year ends on the 31st March, Acts which involve financial operations are usually made to come into operation on the 1st April.

(e) For instances, see Licensing Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7, c. 28); County Courts Act, 1933 (3 Edw. 7, c. 42); Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 58); National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55).

(f) It may be, and generally is, necessary to appoint officers, to prepare and promulgate schemes, rules, or bye-laws, to give notices, and to prescribe forms.

intention appears, be exercised immediately after the passing of the statute, so long as any instrument made thereunder does not, in the absence of necessity or of express enactment, come into operation before the statute itself (g).

SECT. 1.
Commencement and Duration.

298. Any statute may be altered, amended, or repealed in the same session of Parliament (h). Of two statutes passed on the same day one may repeal the other (i).

Alteration
etc. in same session.

299. The duration of a statute is prima facie perpetual (k). It is, however, possible that statutes may escape repeal by inadvertence (l); hence, non-user and inconsistency with more modern legislation may affect the construction put upon them (m). Statutes, moreover, may be intended to be temporary as well as perpetual, and express words are not necessary to show whether Parliament intended a particular statute to be one or the other (n). A statute which merely enacts the continuance for a limited time of an earlier statute will not necessarily abrogate that part of it which was unlimited in operation (o).

Duration.

300. Temporary statutes, which are often tentative (p), may be made perpetual by subsequent Acts. The Act so made perpetual becomes in effect perpetual ab initio (q).

Continuance of temporary
statutes.

Powers, such as, for instance, to take land by compulsory purchase (r), which have expired with the statute creating them, may be prolonged, extended, and even revived by subsequent statutes (s). SECT. 1.
Commencement and Duration.

an Expiring Laws Continuance Act, with a schedule attached, including all classes of temporary Acts, is passed every session (w).

Statutory provision has been made for the continuance, as from their expiration, of statutes which would expire during a session, when Bills have been introduced for that purpose, but at the time of the expiration have not received the Royal Assent (w). Such provision has been found especially necessary for the collection of duties of customs and excise and of income tax (x).

expiration.

301. After the expiration of a statute, in the absence of provision to the contrary, no proceedings can be taken on it, and proceedings already commenced ipso facto determine (y).

When a definition contained in a statute passed for a limited time is incorporated into another statute for its special purpose, the definition, notwithstanding the expiration of the first statute, survives for the purpose of the surviving statute (a).

Repeal by temporary
statute.

302. A temporary statute may now effect the permanent repeal of enactments inconsistent with it (b). Before Lord Brougham's Act (c) it would only have suspended their operation (d).

Difference between repealed and temporary
statute.

303. A statute which is repealed differs from a temporary statute in that the former, except in so far as it relates to transactions already completed under it (e), becomes as if it had never existed, while with respect to the latter the extent of the restrictions imposed and the duration of the provisions are matters of construction (f).

Revival.

304. The revival of an expired statute carries with it the revival of statutes explanatory of it (g).

(u) For the form of these Acts, see that of 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 18).

D. 224, where the full Court of Appeal held that goods seized under a writ of elegit before the date of repeal of the Act authorising delivery might be delivered after that date. The inconveniences attending temporary Acts which it is intended to renew, and the expedients adopted for allaying them, were discussed in the recent cases of *Bowles v. SECT. 2.
Retro-

Effect.

(i) Thus, the Law of Property Amendment Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 38), s. 12, expressly provides that the Law of Property Amendment Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 35), s. 32, shall operate retrospectively.

SECT. 2.
Retrospective
Effect.

The fact of a statute being remedial (l), or designed to protect the public interest (m), is matter to which great weight is to be attached. The operation of a statute on a contract so as to alter it (n), or to render performance of it impossible (o), may be excluded by a sufficiently clear provision in the contract to that effect (p), where the terms of the statute in question are consistent with the inclusion of such a provision (q).

It does not follow that because a statute does not contain the words "from and after the commencement of this Act" it is retrospective (r), or that when it contains them it is not retrospective (s). The word "retrospective" is in itself ambiguous (t).

*A statute is not to be construed to have a greater retrospective operation than its language renders necessary (a).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Disturbance of Rights already Acquired.

Existing rights.

306. An enacting clause which interferes with existing rights must be construed strictly (b), while the largest and most liberal construction is given to an exception which protects such rights (c). In a certain sense all legislation must affect and interfere with existing rights. The rule, therefore, strictly stated, applies to rights which are at the moment of enactment matters of active assertion, and not to rights which may thereafter be the subject of litigation (d). A distinction may frequently have to be drawn between a vested right and a mere privilege (e).

307. Although an existing right of action is not primâ facie taken away by a new statute (f), there is no rule that when a person has commenced an action he has a vested right in the then state of the law (g). A saving clause in a repealing statute may, however, protect him as regards rights which he may have acquired or liabilities he may have incurred thereunder (h).

A mere right existing at the date of a repealing statute to take advantage of the provisions of the statute repealed is not a "right accrued" within the meaning of the usual saving clause providing that all rights accrued by virtue of the statute repealed are to be unaffected by such repeal (i).

SECT. 2.
Retrospective Effect.

action.

SUB-SECT. 3.—Alteration in Judicial Procedure.

308. An enacting clause which affects procedure only is retrospective; for it deals with the mode in which a right of action already existing shall be asserted, and creates no new right of action (k).

Alterations in procedure retrospective.

• (d) For, where a nuisance is authorised by statute (as in Hammersmith etc. Rail Co. v. Brand (1869), L. R. 4 H. L. 171; London and Brighton Rail. Co. v. Truman (1885), 11 App. Cas. 45; compare title NUISANCE, Vol. XXI., pp. 464, 467, 517 et seq.), the whole intention of Parliament is to extinguish rights which otherwise would become enforceable on the happening of certain events. On the other hand, if an action has been commenced, the law existing at the time of its commencement must, in the absence of provision to the contrary, decide the rights of the parties (Hitchcock v. Way (1837), 6 Ad. & El. 943, 951; Restall v. London and South Western Rail. Co. (1868), L. R. 3 Exch. 141; Oldreave v. Puckridge (1867), L. R. 3 Exch. 145; see, contra, *Butcher v. SECT. 2.
Retrospective
Effect.

Upon the principle just enunciated declaratory statutes passed to remedy defects in form are retrospective (l), although declaratory statutes do not reopen decided cases (m).

A right of appeal is not for this purpose a mere matter of procedure (n).

SECT. 3.—Local Limits of Operation.

Territorial limits.

309. The operation of a statute primâ facie extends to the whole of the United Kingdom, and not to any place outside it (o). If the intention is either to limit the operation to a part of the United Kingdom, or to extend the operation beyond, there should be express words to that effect (p).

Persons to whom statutes
apply.

310. As to persons, a statute applies to all persons in the United Kingdom, or in the King's dominions* (if the language can be so construed (q)), including foreigners who during their

(Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 51), s. 19); compare Evans v. Morris, [1913] W. N. 58.

(l) Thus, the Poor Relief (Settlement) Act, 1831 (1 Will. 4, c. 18), s. 2, operated retrospectively on the Poor Relief (Settlement) Act, 1825 (6 Geo. 4, c. 57) (R. v. Dursley (Inhabitants) (1832), 3 B. & Ad. 465, 469); and the Bastardy Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 10), on the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 101) (R. v. Milner (1845), 14 L. J. (M. C.) 157; R. v. Cheshire Justices (1845), 3 Dow. & L. 337); see also A.-G. v. Hertford (Marquis) (1849), 3 Exch. 670, 685; A.-G. v. Theobald (1890), 24 Q. B. D. 557; *Jones v. (o) R. v. Jameson, [1896] 2 Q. B. 425, 430; see, further, Cope v. Doherty (1858), 2 De G. & J. 614, C. A.; R. v. Mallow Union Guardians (1860), 12 I. C. L. R. 35, 40; Re Sawers, Ex parte Blain (1879), 12 Ch. D. 522, 532, C. A.; Tomalin v. Pearson (S.) & Son, Ltd., [1909] 2 K. B. 61, C. A.; Swift v. A.-G. for Ireland, [1912] A. C. 276.

(p) R. v. Jameson, supra, which particularly considers the Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 90), as directed to "any person within the limits of His Majesty's Dominions." If an Act is to apply to England and Wales only, the extent clause runs: "This Act shall not apply to Scotland or Ireland." The Isle of Man and the Channel Islands are not parts of the United Kingdom, and if it is intended that an Act should apply to them, the application must be made expressly; see title DEPENDENCIES AND COLONIES, Vol. X., p. 573, and compare title CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol. VI., p. 388. Where an Act is to be applied to the Channel Islands the formula runs: "This Act shall apply to the Channel Islands, and the Royal Courts thereof shall register it accordingly." While all statutes passed between 1704 and 1800 apply primâ facie to England and Scotland, the Union with Ireland Act, 1800 (39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 67), did not extend to Ireland English or British statutes passed before 1800 (Lane v. Bennett (1836), 1 M. & W. 70). Such an Act, on the principle laid down (see p. 159, ante), was not retrospective, and where such extension has been desired, special legislation has been necessary for the purpose. Pre-Union Scottish Acts have been revised by the Statute Law Revision (Scotland) Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 38).

residence there owe him allegiance (r), and to the King's subjects all over the world, wherever they are (s). When Parliament uses general words it is dealing only with persons or things over which it has properly jurisdiction (t); it would be futile to presume to exercise a jurisdiction which it could not enforce (u).

SECT. 3.
Local Limits of Operation.

311. Pari ratione an English statute binds all landed property within the realm, to whomsoever belonging (w), and the movable property of one domiciled in England (a). It cannot, however, be applied to the property of foreigners so long as it is situated abroad (b), or to land or other immovable property without the realm (c).

Property to which statutes
apply.

312. In reference to fiscal statutes imposing duties in respect of the passing of property on death, it has been laid down that, in general, if a British-born subject or a foreigner dies domiciled out of the United Kingdom the whole of his personal estate is to be regarded as situate in the country of domicile, and therefore exempt from the operation of such a statute, but that if such a person dies domiciled here his personal assets, wherever situate, are subject to its operation (d).

C. 102. The Foreign Jurisdiction Acts have generally been careful to limit their provisions to British subjects, but incidentally the rights or privileges of foreigners may be affected; see Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 37), s. 2, asserting jurisdiction over persons resorting to countries without regular governments; see also title CONFLICT OF LAWS, Vol. VI., pp. 448 et seq.

(u) "It is by international law an absolute nullity" (Sirdar Gurdial Singh v. Faridkote (Rajah), [1894] A. C. 670, P. C., per Lord SELBORNE, at p. 684). Though if it pleased Parliament to make laws as to foreigners out of the jurisdiction, it would, apparently, be the duty of courts of justice to execute them (Cail v. Papayanni, The "Amalia" (1863), 1 Moo. P. C. C. (N. S.) 471, per Dr. LUSHINGTON, at p. 474). A particular statute may contemplate its benefits being enjoyed outside the jurisdiction, as, for instance, by spiritual officers under the Bishops in Foreign Countries Act, 1841 (5 Vict. c. 6) (see title ECCLESIASTICAL LAW, Vol. XI., p. 498), and compensation under a Workmen's Compensation Act, by the dependant of an alien (Krzus v. Crow's Nest Pass Coal Co., Ltd., [1912] A. C. 590, P. C.).

(a) Freke v. Carbery (Lord), supra (where Lord SELBORNE, L.C., prefers the distinction between land and movables to the conventional one between realty and personality). Mortgages on land, as well as leaseholds, have been held subject to the lex situs (Re Hoyles, Row v. Jagg, [1910] 2 Ch. 333; affirmed, [1911] 1 Ch. 179, C. A.; see title CONFLICT OF LAWS, Vol. VI., pp. 196 et seq.; and compare title MORTGAGE, Vol. XXI., p. 183). A simple contract debt, on the other hand, is within the area of the local jurisdiction within which the debtor for the time being resides (Stamps Commissioner v. Hope, [1891] A. C. 476, P. C.).

SECT. 3.
Local Limits of Operation.

Other fiscal statutes, such as the Income Tax Acts, cannot be construed by the light of decisions as to death duties (e); but some limitation of their scope may be arrived at by considering the machinery provided for enforcing them (f).

Criminal
statutes.

313. Statutes dealing with crime are presumed to apply to crimes committed in the United Kingdom (g). Such presumption may be displaced in the case of a statute forbidding a crime which, though intended to be carried out in another part of the King's dominions, is initiated here, or which, though initiated elsewhere, is intended to take effect here (h). Certain offences committed by British subjects in foreign states are by statute made cognisable and punishable in England (i) and in any British possession (k).

Territorial waters.

314. The territorial sovereignty of the Crown extends to territorial waters (l).

Colonial
statutes.

315. The Crown having power to create a local legislature in a dependency, a statute enacted by such local legislature has, as to matters within its competence, the operation and force of sovereign legislation (m), and any matter lawfully enacted by it must, apparently, be recognised as having statutory authority here (n).

SECT. 4.—Effect on The Crown.

When Crown bound.

316. The Crown is not bound by the provisions of any statute (o), unless directly or by necessary implication referred (g) See title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 279. It follows from this that a company registered in England may acquire a concession to conduct lotteries in Persia, although the latter would infringe the Lotteries Acts if carried on here (*Macuse v. (n) Phillips v. Eyre, supra. It follows, however, on principle (though the matter has been set at rest by a declaratory statute (Colonial Laws Validity Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 63), s. 2)) that any Act of a legislature so created which is repugnant to one of the Imperial Parliament must be pro tanto inoperative; but see *R. v. SECT. 4.

Effect on the Crown.

(p) R. v. Cook (1790), 3 Term Rep. 519, 521. It has not always been easy to determine when the Crown is bound by necessary implication. The following rules seem to be laid down in old writers and reports:— (i.) General words do not bar the King of any prerogative, estate, right, title, or interest, which is sole and inseparable to his person (Magdalen College Case (1615), 11 Co. Rep. 66 b, 74 b); but in things which are not incident solely and inseparably to his person, but belong to every subject, and may be severed, he may be bound (Custom Case (1582), 12 Co. Rep. 17, 18). (ii.) He is bound by an Act made for the public good, and for the prevention of injury to the public (Com. Dig. tit. Parliament (H. 1); Bac. Abr. tit. Prerogative (E.) 5). (iii.) He is bound by an Act made to suppress wrong, though not named, for he is the fountain of justice, and common right, and being God's Lieutenant cannot do a wrong (Magdalen College Case, supra, at p. 72 a; and see R. v. Wright (1834), 1 Ad. & El. 434, 446, Ex. Ch.). (iv.) He is bound by general words which tend to perfect the will of a founder or donor, and provide for the safety of inheritances (Magdalen College Case, supra, at p. 73 a; Willion v. Berkley (1561), Plowd. 223, 236). (v.) He is bound by general statutes which provide necessary and profitable remedy for the maintenance of religion, the advancement of learning, and for the relief of the poor (Case of Ecclesiastical Persons (1601), 5 Co. Rep. 14 b; Magdalen College Case, supra, at p. 70 b; R. v. Armagh (Archbishop) (1722), 1 Str. 516). (vi.) He is bound when he claims in his natural capacity as heir of a subject per formam doni (Case of a Fine (1604), 7 Co. Rep. 32 a).

In later times the Crown was held not to be bound in A.-G. v. Newman (1815), 1 Price, 438 (where a restrictive proviso on right of the Crown to proceed for arrears of duties had not been re-enacted by a repealing and amending statute); Smithett v. Blythe (1830), 1 B. & Ad. 509 (where the obligation to pay lighthouse tolls in respect of post packets was negatived, although the lighthouse Act contained an exemption in favour of ships of war only); Weymouth Corporation v. Nugent (1865), 6 B. & S. 22 (harbour dues); A.-G. v. Donaldson (1842), 10 M. & W. 117, 123 (distress levied for rates in Royal palace); R. v. Bayly (1841), 1 Dr. & War. 213 (stat. McCann* (1868), L. R. 3 Q. B. 141 (Commissioners of Works rateable in respect of a bridge); A.-G. v. Edmunds (1870), 22 L. T. 667 (Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62)); A.-G. v. Constable (1879), 4 Ex. D. 172 (Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), ss. 24 (5), 34); Re Bonham, Ex parte Postmaster-General (1879), 10 Ch. D. 595, C. A. (Bankruptcy Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71)); Coomber v. Berks Justices (1883), 9 App. Cas. 61 (Income Tax Acts, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35), and 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 34)); Northam Bridge Co. v. R. (1886), 55 L. T. 759 (payment of tolls); R. v. Kent Justices (1889), 24 Q. B. D. 181 (Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 49)); Perry v. Eames, Salaman v. Eames, Mercers' Co. v. Eames, [1891] 1 Ch. 658 (Prescription Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 3)); followed in Wheaton v. Maple & Co., [1893] 3 Ch. 48, C. A.; Hornsey Urban Council v. Hennell, [1902] 2 K. (Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), not applicable to land acquired and used for purposes of the Crown).

But the Crown has been held bound in De Bode (Baron) v. R. (1848), 13 Q. B. 364, 379, Ex. Ch. (Law Terms Act, 1830 (11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 70), which constituted a court to try writs of error); Westminster Vestry v. Hoskins, [1899] 2 Q. B. 474 (buildings of volunteer corps subject to the sanitary provisions of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120)); doubted in Hornsey Urban Council v. Hennell, supra, and in Stewart v. Thames Conservators, [1908] 1 K. B. 893, where, upon the construction of their private Act, it was held that the Crown

(q) For note (q), see p. 166, post.

SECT. 4.
Effect on the Crown.

The Crown for this purpose means not only the King personally, but also the officers of state when acting on behalf of the Crown in the discharge of executive duties (r), whether in the United Kingdom or anywhere within British dominions (s).

Rules of
construction.

317. Statutes made for the benefit of the Crown must be beneficially construed (t), and those restraining the prerogative must be strictly construed (u).

Exercise of powers.

318. The question has arisen whether a power given to the Crown by statute is exhausted by a single exercise of it (w). Where the power is conferred by a statute passed since 1889, the power may be exercised from time to time as occasion requires (a). If such a statute confers a power to make rules, regulations, and bye-laws, this power, unless the contrary intention appears, includes a power to rescind, revoke, amend or vary them (b).

SECT. 5.—Effect on Existing Law.

Intention of subsequent statute.

319. The common law gives place to statute law, and an older statute to one more recent, where the language and the objects of the latter are inconsistent with those of the former (c). Even could not exact from the respondents payment of income tax. It is, however, usual in modern statutes to mention the Crown specifically when it is to be bound; see, for instance, Motor Car Act, 1903 (3 Edw. 7, c. 36), s. 16; and see, generally, titles CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol. VI., p. 409; METROPOLIS, Vol. XX., p. 463.

without negative or repealing words, expressed or implied, the intention of Parliament to alter what already existed is not apparent, and it is always to be presumed that there was no such intention (h). Where, however, such intention is evident, as by the introduction of that which is inconsistent with the law as it previously existed, either affirmative or negative language may directly or impliedly repeal what is contrary to the purview of the new statute (i).

General law.

‘ 321. The general law of the country is not altered by special legislation made without particular reference to it (k), though a statute passed for a particular purpose must so far as that purpose extends override general enactments (l). A general statute may be repealed pro tanto by a special statute, an exception being made out of or a condition being imposed upon its general provisions (m); or a prior enactment may indirectly be rendered inoperative without actual repeal (n). The same principle is applicable where it is provided that two statutes are to be read together (o), or one is incorporated by reference in the other (p).

or introduces special conditions altering the quality of an offence, or the procedure in relation to it (d).

324. A special statute is not repealed by a subsequent special statute, unless there are words which operate expressly or by necessary implication to repeal it (e).

SECT. 6.—Operation of Various Kinds of Statutes.

Classes of
statutes.

325. Every statute is made either for the purpose of effecting a change in the law or of declaring the existing law (f). What was intended by Parliament in each particular enactment will not necessarily appear from introductory words, for the mere use of words which in their literal signification would import that a statute was declaratory does not render it so if in effect it introduces new law (g).

declaratory
statutes.

326. A declaratory statute to the effect that the construction placed by an English court upon a section of an English Act is erroneous affects the subsequent construction of a corresponding section in an Act applicable to Scotland only (h), and it is submitted that the converse is also true.

Mandatory and directory
statutes.

327. A distinction is commonly drawn between mandatory and directory statutes, and it is said of the former that they must be fulfilled exactly, but the latter substantially only (i).

Upon the principle that the ordinary sense of enacting words is primarily to be adhered to (k), provisions which appear on the face of them to be imperative without strong reason be held to be directory (l); nor are those which are susceptible of a permissive meaning to be construed in the first instance as imperative (m). A duty, however, may exist, outside and apart from the enacting words (n), whereby those on whom a faculty or power is conferred by the statute are under an obligation to exercise it (o). SECT. 6.

Operation
of Various Kinds of Statutes.

Statutes not construed as mandatory.

Broadly speaking, it may be said that powers conferred on courts of law to effectuate legal rights (t), provisions as to time in regard to procedure (a), and generally in public statutes, where the thing to be done is for the public benefit or in advancement of public justice (b), enacting words must be taken to have a compulsory force. On the other hand, statutes conferring private rights (c), or prescribing that certain things are to be done within a certain time, time not being of the essence (d), or in a certain manner (e), or by those whose action the person invoking the aid of the statute is unable to control (f), are usually directory only. The courts lean against construing words as mandatory when the result would be that the common law rights of individuals would be infringed (g). Much will depend upon the subject-matter, and it is in deciding whether a provision in a statute is imperative or permissive that the intention of Parliament has most strictly to be regarded. The distinctions are often fine (h).

A provision in a statute is often directory in the sense that it is not a condition precedent, but a condition subsequent, as to which responsible persons may be blamable and punishable if they do not observe it (i).

Affirmative and negative
 statutes.

328. In addition to the distinction already drawn between affirmative and negative statutes (k), the former are sometimes regarded as prima facie directory and the latter as mandatory (l). At the same time affirmative mandatory language has been held to prohibit that which is contrary to it (m). On the other hand, a SECT. 7.—Statutory Duties and Statutory Powers.

329. Statutory powers (d) for the purpose of carrying out public or private objects imposed by Parliament on or sought by bodies or persons who otherwise could not carry out those objects without infringing the legal rights of others are rarely granted without the imposition of correlative duties (e).

Powers and

330. When acts for which statutory powers are required are not done in accordance with the powers granted, the persons doing them can claim no protection in connexion with them in respect of trespass committed or nuisance caused or other tortious acts (f). Moreover, correlative duties imposed by the same statute or statutes in pari materia must be performed scrupulously and without negligence (g). It is immaterial whether non-performance is wilful and the negative"; R. v. All Saints, Wigan (Churchwardens) (1876), 1 App. Cas. 611, 629.

(a) Stallwood v. Tredger (1815), 2 Phillim. 287; Catterall v. Sweetman (1845), 9 Jur. 951, 954.

(b) The Sussex Peerage (1844), 11 Cl. & Fin. 85, 148 (Royal Marriage Act, 1772 (12 Geo. 3, c. 11), s. 1); Woodward v. Sarsons (1875), L. R. 10 C. P. 733, 749; Phillips v. Goff (1886), 17 Q. B. D. 805, 812 (these two cases holding that a different principle applied to the schedules of the Ballot Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 33), from that applicable to the body of the enactment).

(c) Walter v. Rumbal (1695), 1 Ld. Raym. 53, followed in Jarvis v. Hemmings, [1912] 1 Ch. 462; Mountcashell (Earl) v. O'Neill (Viscount) (1856), 5 H. L. Cas. 937 (where an affidavit required by statute to be made by a tenant of lands in a prescribed form was held sufficient when made by his agent).

(d) Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Gibbs (1866), 11 H. L. Cas. 686, per BLACKBURN, J., at p. 713: "If the Legislature directs or authorises the doing of a particular thing, the doing of it cannot be wrongful"; compare East Fremantle Corporation v. Annois, [1902] A. C. 213, P. C. As to the obligations and liabilities of public bodies in executing works under statutory authority, see titles CORPORATIONS, Vol. VIII., pp. 388 et seq.; PUBLIC AUTHORITIES AND PUBLIC OFFICERS, Vol. XXIII., pp. 312 et seq.; TORT, pp. 480 et seq., post. As to the time of exercising of statutory powers and the persons to execute them, see Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 32 (1), (2); and p. 166, ante.

(e) Thus, when a statute authorised the levying of a toll, it was held that the accommodation for which the toll was paid must be provided (Aiton v. Stephen (1876), 1 App. Cas. 456). Commissioners incorporated for the execution of works, with rating powers, have implied power to levy a rate to discharge a liability arising out of their servants' negligence (Gallsworthy v. Selby Dam Drainage Commissioners, [1892] 1 Q. B. 348, C. A.); and see titles NEGLIGENCE, Vol. XXI., pp. 464 et seq.; NUISANCE, Vol. XXI., pp. 563 et seq.

deliberate (h), or due to the negligence of persons necessarily employed; nor is it material that a defendant receives no personal benefit from the thing done (i).

331. A statute may impose a duty in such terms that a right of action will accrue to any (j) person injured by a breach of or failure to perform it (k), even when the statute provides some other sanction for the purpose of ensuring its performance (l). When such a right of action accrues it may be of such a nature that it is not open to the defendant to set up by way of defence matters which would be so available in an action at common law, such as negligence, or acquiescence in the breach on the part of the plaintiff, or common employment (m). The duty imposed may be absolute (n); or it may be such that it is an answer to a claim that reasonable care has been taken (o).

(m) Groves v. Wimborne (Lord), supra; compare Chapman v. Michaelson, [1908] 2 Ch. 612; affirmed, [1909] 1 Ch. 238, C. A.; Jones v. Canadian Pacific Rail. Co. (1913), 29 T. L. R. 773, P. C. Where the provision has not been inserted for the protection of life and limb generally, but for the benefit of particular persons, it has, however, been held that they can waive it; compare title MASTER AND SERVANT, Vol. XX., pp. 129, 130. Thus, in Graham v. Ingleby (1848), 1 Exch. 651, the plaintiffs were not allowed to set up the breach of a statutory requirement that pleas in abatement should be verified by affidavit, after the issue had been made up; and in Park Gate Iron Co. v. Coates (1870), L. R. 5 C. P. 634, a provision for giving notice and depositing security on appeal from a county court was waived by the respondents joining in the settlement of a special case.

reasonably (q), and without negligence (r), and when conferred for a purpose unknown to the common law it is assumed that what is not expressly or impliedly authorised is prohibited (s). In considering the manner of exercise the courts have regard to the objects of the statute (t), construing more liberally powers exercised for public purposes than those given to private corporations for objects of gain (a).

SECT. 7.
Statutory Duties and Statutory Powers.

333. Persons who obtain Acts for specific purposes, though bound to execute them strictly in accordance with their powers if they execute them, are, apart from express language, under no obligation to execute them at all (b). Hence it does not necessarily follow that because a statute confers powers the exercise of which might prevent injury to persons who would otherwise be injuriously affected, the donees of such powers are liable in damages for the non-exercise of such powers (c). Promoters of private legislation are, however, required to make deposits, which may be made available by the provisions of their statute, when passed, for Part V.—Criminal and Penal Statutes.

SECT. 1.—Construction.

SECT. 1.

Construction.

338. A penal statute is one of which the primary object is expressly enforceable by fine, imprisonment, or other punishment (l).

Definition of penal statute.
Rules of
construction.

339. It is a general rule that penal enactments are to be construed strictly (m), and that the legal meaning of the words used are not to be departed from, unless it appears from the context that Parliament has intended them to be used in a popular or wider sense (n). They are not to be extended by equity or enlarged by parity of reasoning (o). On the contrary, no man incurs a penalty unless the act which subjects him to it is within the spirit as well as the letter of the statute imposing such penalty (p), and a person against whom a penalty is sought to be enforced is entitled to the benefit of a doubt, if there is any (q).

In construing a penal statute, however, as in construing any other, the intention of Parliament as indicated by the language used is the best guide, and courts of law further remedial statutes, though penal, not by making them more penal, but by letting them take their course (r).

(l) See title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., pp. 232, 233.

The rule is extended to statutes affecting a man's status (Re North, Ex parte Hasluck, [1895] 2 Q. B. 264, 271, C. A.). Crimes are in the present day much more accurately defined by statute or otherwise than they formerly were (R. v. Tolson (1889), 23 Q. B. D. 168, C. C. R., per STEPHEN, J., at p. 187).

(r) R. v. Vine (1875), L. R. 10 Q. B. 195 (where the court took the view that a statute prohibiting one convicted of felony from holding a publican's licence was not so much punitive as intended to protect the public);

SECT. 1. A penal statute which does not create a new offence, but deals only with procedure and punishment, may be retrospective (s).

Construction.

SECT. 2.—Operation.

Offences criminal by statute.

Mala prohibita; mala in se.

Classification.

340. It is a principle of criminal law that, ordinarily speaking, a crime is not committed unless a wrongful intention or some other blameworthy condition of mind (mens rea) can be imputed to the person charged with an overt act alleged to be criminal (t). Where, therefore, an act in itself indifferent becomes criminal if done with a particular intent, the intent must be proved; on the other hand, if the act is in itself unlawful, the law implies a criminal intent (a). This ancient division of offences into mala prohibita and mala in se has only a partial application to offences made criminal by statute, because, everyone being assumed to know the statute law, the fact that the offence prohibited is contrary to the moral sense of the community is assumed to be known and recognised by a person sought to be held guilty (h).

341. Accordingly, a statute may relate to such a subject-matter and may be so framed as to make an act criminal whether there has in fact been an intention to break the law, or otherwise to do wrong, or not (c). Apart from isolated and extreme instances, such cases may be classed under three heads (d), namely:—

(1) Where the acts are not criminal in any real sense, but are prohibited under a penalty in the public interest (e);

(2) Where the acts are public nuisances; thus, an employer has been held liable on indictment for a nuisance caused by workmen without his knowledge and contrary to his orders (f);

Prince* (1875), L. R. 2 C. C. R. 154 (which case may, however, be one of those exceptional cases, grounded on the language of a statute, referred to in the text, infra).

(3) Where, although the proceeding is criminal in form, it is really only a summary mode of enforcing a civil right (g). SECT. 2.
Operation.

342. A statute may, notwithstanding any legal presumption of non-liability, render a person liable in all circumstances, as, for instance, an employer for the acts of his servants, even if committed in violation of express orders (h). Liability for servants.

343. Where a statute provides for payment of a fine, a body corporate may recover it (i), or be liable to it (j), though it cannot commit a crime for which imprisonment or death would be the only punishment (k). Subject to this it may be indicted (l) and convicted under any statute in which mens rea is not an element of the offence (m). Liability of corporation.

344. Where an act or omission constitutes an offence under two or more statutes, or both under a statute and at common law, then the offender, unless it is otherwise provided by some statute, is liable to be prosecuted and punished under either or any of these statutes or the common law, though not to be punished twice for the same offence (n). Alternative methods of proceeding.

(h) As, for example, statutes passed to prevent adulteration (Pearks, Gunston, and Tee, Ltd. v. Ward, Hennen v. Southern Counties Dairy Co., [1902] 2 K. B. 1, 11; *Pain v. (n) Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 33. A difficulty frequently arose where an Act created a new offence, but the facts which constituted that offence also constituted an offence under some other enactment; compare Crepps v. Durdan (1777), 2 Cowp. 640; Michell v.

SECT. 2.
Operation.
Summary procedure.

If an offence is by statute made punishable "summarily" or "on summary conviction," the whole of the procedure under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts (o) applies to the trial of such offence (p).

Part VI.—Fiscal and Revenue Statutes.

SECT. 1.—Construction.

Taxing statutes construed strictly.

345. The language of a statute imposing a tax must receive a strict construction (q). If the person sought to be taxed comes within the letter of the law, he must be taxed (r). On the other hand, if the Crown, seeking to recover the tax, cannot bring the subject within the letter of the law, the subject is free, however much within the spirit of the law the case might otherwise appear to be (s). There can be no equitable construction admissible in a taxing statute (t).

Statutory
tolls.

The rule as to the strict construction of taxing Acts is not to be extended to cases of statutory tolls and the like, where the payment made is in return for services rendered (u).

(u) The rule probably arose from the fact that there being no a priori liability in a subject to pay any particular tax, no reasoning founded on any supposed relationship between taxpayer and taxing authority could

346. In a taxing statute, language, though generally used in its ordinary and popular sense, may sometimes be used in a sense derived from previous legislation in pari materid and the practice under it (w). When a special meaning is found assigned to a particular word in any statute, that special or technical meaning must be adhered to, even though the technicality may be confined to the jurisprudence of one part of the United Kingdom and the operation of the statute extends to the whole (x).

SECT. 1.
Construction.
Previous legislation considered.

347. Words occurring in a statute imposing taxation throughout the United Kingdom should be construed so as to make the incidence of taxation alike in every part of it (y). Where legal expressions are taken from the language or style of one part, they must be applied in an analogous or corresponding sense in the other parts (a).

Equality throughout United Kingdom.

348. In construing a taxing statute little weight is to be attached to the fact that specific exemptions from its operation are to be found in it. Such exemptions are often introduced to quiet the fears of those whose interests are threatened, and who are apprehensive that they may not fall within some general exception. These may be cases in which expressio unius will not be exclusio alterius (b).

Construction of exemptions.

349. A taxing statute should, so far as is consistent with the ordinary canons of construction, be interpreted so as not to operate unreasonably in the case of a foreigner sojourning in this country (c).

Part VII. — Local, Personal, and Private Statutes.

SECT. 1.—In General.

Modes of
classification.

354. In addition to the broad distinction between public general statutes and those which are local, personal, and private (h), statutes may be further comprehensively distinguished as "public" and "private" (i), or "general" and "special," having regard in the former case to the manner of their enactment, in the latter to the mode of their operation (k). Whether a statute is public or private does not depend upon technical considerations, such as whether it contains a clause declaring it to be a public Act, but upon the nature and substance of the case (l).

Exemption may, however, upon the particular construction of an Act, attach to premises for all time and for all purposes (London Corporation v. Netherlands Steamboat Co., [1906] A. C. 263).

(f) Hume v. Haig (1799), 8 Bro. Parl. Cas. 196. The annual Revenue Acts, which frequently have not received the Royal Assent before the end of the session, have been made to operate so far as relates to the imposition of both existing and new duties from the date of the Resolution of the House of Commons. But in such cases, until the Act had been passed, there was, formerly, no legal obligation to pay the tax or authority to collect it (Bowles v. Bank of England, [1913] 1 Ch. 57); see now, however, Provisional Collection of Taxes Act, 1913 (3 Geo. 5, c. 3).

(h) See p. 114, ante. The distinction between public and private statutes is first drawn on the enrolment in Chancery in the thirty-first year of Henry VIII.; see note to R. v. Milton (Inhabitants) (1843), 1 Car. & Kir. 58, 61.

SECT. 1.
In General.

355. Promoters applying to Parliament for statutory powers to purchase land must show that what they are proposing to do is of such public importance as to make it reasonable that they should be so far enabled to interfere with rights of private property as to compel owners to sell (m). For Parliament only permits the rights of individuals to be infringed so far as is necessary in the public interest (n), and the courts will take every means of defeating an attempt by a private Act to affect the rights either of the Crown or of other persons who have not been brought in (o).

How far
private rights
affected.

A private statute is no exception (p) to the rule that the authority of a statute is supreme, and that if a statute by plain, unambiguous, and positive enactment affects rights of parties who were not before Parliament when it was under consideration, whether by oversight or from disregard of the rules prescribed by either House, it is the duty of the courts to carry it into effect (q). Such a statute is of as much force and as binding as any public Act relating to the most important interests of the community (r).

Generally speaking, however, Parliament in giving its sanction to a private Bill adjusts the rights and obligations of the persons appearing before it, with a reservation of the rights of all others (s). It is now the general practice to insert saving clauses.

(l) Dawson v. Paver (1847), 5 Hare, 415. The expression "private legislation" was objected to in Shrewsbury (Earl) v. Scott (1859), 6 C. B. (N. S.) 1, per COCKBURN, C.J., at p. 172, where he expressed the opinion that the phrase "legislation for private purposes" would be more correct.

(p) It was at one time thought that a private statute did not bind persons not expressly named in it, even in the absence of a saving clause (Boswel's Case (1583), cited in Barrington's Case (1610), 8 Co. Rep. 136 b, 138 a; Lucy v. Levington (1771), 1 Vent. 175, 176; Shrewsbury (Earl) v. Scott, supra, per COCKBURN, C.J., at p. 157). As to the effect of statutory enactments on custom, see title CUSTOM AND USAGES, Vol. X., p. 247.

(q) The view has often been expressed by courts that private statutes are contracts made by Parliament on behalf of every person interested in anything to be done under them (Blakemore v. Glamorganshire Canal Navigation, supra; Lee v. Milner (1837), 2 Y. & C. (ex.) 611, 618; Aiton v. Stephen (1876), 1 App. Cas. 456, 462; *Rothes (Countess) v. SECT. 2.

Construction.

Strict construction.

SECT. 2.—Construction.

356. Private statutes must be construed strictly (t), the more so when, as frequently happens, Parliament has gone into an elaborate and minute investigation of plans and legislated accordingly (u). It is never assumed that Parliament has given powers which would infringe existing rights, even though the Act would be inoperative without them (a), and clauses to preserve general rights will receive a wide interpretation (b). There is a presumption that where private rights are infringed compensation will be provided (c).

Balance of convenience.

357. Private statutes being enacted not only for the benefit of the persons or corporations procuring them, but for that of the public, regard should be paid in their construction to the balance of convenience on either side (d). As a rule, however, they are construed against the promoters (e), for the language must be regarded as theirs (f).

(t) Altrincham Union Assessment Committee v. Cheshire Lines Committee (1885), 15 Q. B. D. 597, C. (f) For note (f), see p. 185, post.

358. The courts strive against putting a construction on words which will tend to enact something unconnected with or unnecessary for the purpose of the promoters (g), and construe a private statute, which gives to an association of persons power to interfere with the rights of private property, in such a way as to prevent the use of such powers for any collateral purpose (h). SECT. 2.
Construction.
Purpose of
statute.

359. So far as a private statute operates as a contract or a quasi-contract, it must be construed by the rules of law pertaining to such a contract (i). This is necessarily the case where a contract in ordinary form is appended in a schedule (k). Where a statute is passed to simplify the intricacies of a private estate, the interests of those not immediately concerned can rarely be affected (l). Contract.

360. The terms used in a private statute may be explained by reference to a similar use of the same terms in a public statute (m). Reference to
statutes.

361. Saving clauses and provisoes must be regarded as having little bearing upon the construction of private statutes. They are often inserted at the instance of individuals as the result of private bargains (n), in which case they form no part of a scheme of general legislation, and should not be allowed to have any effect upon the construction of general clauses (o). Saving clauses.

The latter decision, however, must be regarded as qualified by the opinion expressed by the majority of the Court of Appeal in Corbett v. South Eastern and Chatham Railways Managing Committee, supra.

(m) Thus, in Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Henderson Brothers (1888), 13 App. Cas. 595, the House of Lords in determining the meaning of "trading inwards" and "trading outwards" in the Mersey Dock Act Consolidation Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. xcii.), had recourse not only to a series of Liverpool Dock Acts, but to the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 36), and the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 21).

SECT. 2.
Construction.
Incorporation of general
statute.

362. Where a special statute incorporates a general statute, any doubt as to the application of the latter to the particular circumstances must be solved by reference to the former (p). A special statute containing no provisions inconsistent with a general statute is, however, controlled by the latter, even if this is not expressly incorporated (q); and the powers conferred by it are deemed to be in addition to and not in diminution of existing common law rights (r).

A general statute incorporated with a special statute must be read as if the sections of the former were written into the latter and formed part of it (s). General statutes intended to be incorporated with special statutes, such as the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (t), were passed because Parliament thought that general provisions which had been ascertained, after sufficient experience, to be proper and necessary to be introduced into statutes authorising undertakings of the character there referred to had better be enacted once for all in a general form (a).

SECT. 3.—Operation.

How far ordinary law
affected.

363. So far as the rights and obligations of all persons concerned are to be found within the provisions of a statute—which generally directs that compensation shall be made to those whose property has been taken, or whose rights have been injuriously affected (b)—the ordinary law applicable to the acts of parties in dealing with their own land or affecting their neighbours may be ousted (c).

(p) As, for instance, in determining whether "railway and works" in the circumstances included a station (Midland Rail. Co. v. Ambergate, Nottingham, and Boston and Eastern Junction Rail. Co. (1853), 10 Hare, 359); and see London and Blackwall Rail. Co. v. Limehouse District Board of Works (1856), 3 K. & J. 123; A.-G. v. Great Eastern Rail. Co. (1872), 7 Ch. As to the effect of incorporation, see ibid., p. 15. The general Act may be looked at with reference to the powers conferred upon companies of dealing with land when acquired, but the special Act for the purpose of ascertaining what may be called the contract between landowner and company (Simpson v. South Staffordshire Waterworks Co. (1865), 4 De G. J. & Sm. 679, 687).

(c) British Cast Plate Manufacturers (Governor & Co.) v. Meredith (1792), 4 Term Rep. 794; Dunn v. Birmingham Canal Co. (1872), L. R.

In the absence of special provision, however, property which is the subject of special statutes does not lose the characteristics attaching to property which is the subject of ordinary contract (d); and a direction to deal with it in a particular way does not withdraw it from the obligations and charges imposed on it by the general law (e).

SECT. 3.
Operation.

364. The mere fact of promoters having procured the passing of a special statute by representations, made on deposited plans or otherwise, does not establish the accuracy of such representations, unless they are incorporated in the statute (f). Parliament may also confer greater rights than are indicated by the deposited plans (g).

Representations.

365. General statutes, whether enacted previously (h) or subsequently (i), do not, if couched in general terms, operate to control special rights granted by private statutes which, while conferring such special rights, have also imposed special obligations (j). A subsequent general statute may, however, indicate an express intention to control (k) or to abrogate particular rights (l), especially where those rights are attached to a particular locality, and the subsequent statute brings to it entirely new benefits (m).

Effect of general statutes.

366. Where Parliament authorises the amendment of any local or personal statute by a duly appointed authority, it authorises the amendment of such portion of a statute which is partly public and Operation.

- Conditional agreement. 367. A conditional agreement entered into by the promoters of a private Bill that in the event of the Bill becoming law they will deal with the matters brought within their competence by such law in a particular manner is not invalid as contrary to public policy (o).
- Exercise of powers. 368. Powers conferred by special statutes must be exercised within a reasonable time (p). They are not assignable (q).

Part VIII.—Enforcement.

SECT. 1.—Consequences of Non-observance.

SUB-SECT. 1.—In General.

- Means of enforcement. 369. The object of a statute is to command people to do or to abstain from doing some particular thing, and when a statute directs things to be done or not to be done, either the statute itself provides the means for its own enforcement, or Parliament acts upon the supposition that the existing laws of the realm are sufficient to enforce the rights and liabilities arising thereunder (r). The mere fact of a statute imposing a penalty for the non-performance of an act implies that there is a legal compulsion to do it, and that is so whatever may be the destination of the penalty (s).
- Classification of statutes. 370. For the purpose of enforcement statutes may be divided into three classes, namely—
 (1) Those in which an obligation is affirmed which already exists at common law, and a special and peculiar form of remedy is given;
 (2) Those in which an obligation not previously existing at common law is created, but no remedy is provided; and

A time is usually limited in the Act for the powers to be exercised; compare Baker v. Metropolitan Rail. Co. (1862), 31 Beav. 504, 509; Ward v. Wolverhampton Waterworks Co. (1871), L. (3) Those in which a new obligation is created, and a special remedy is provided (t).

371. In the first class those entitled to enforce the statute may have recourse to the special remedy mentioned or to the common law remedy, for the sanctions are cumulative (a). Only one, however, can be exercised (b).

372. In the second class, where an obligation is created, but no mode of enforcing its performance is ordained, common law sanctions and incidents will ordinarily attach (c).

373. In the third class, where a particular mode of enforcing a new obligation is specified, such obligation, as a general rule, can be enforced in no other manner (d), even though this may involve ousting the jurisdiction of a court of law (e). Such statutes

(a) R. v. Robinson (1759), 2 Burr. 799, per Lord MANSFIELD, at p. 803. On the same principle statutes which add cumulative penalties for an existing statutory offence do not repeal the earlier statutes (R. v. Jackson (1775), 1 Cowp. 297; Cropps v. Durden (1777), 2 Cowp. 640; Apothecaries' Co. v. Jones, [1893] 1 Q. B. 89; Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 33).

(b) Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 33. Conversely, persons to whom remedies are open under two different statutes must elect to proceed under one of them (Re Bedford Charity (Masters etc.) (1819), 2 Swan. 470, 518). Where a later statute describes an offence created by a former statute, and affixes a different punishment, giving an appeal where there was no appeal before, the offence should be proceeded against under the later statute (Michell v. Brown (1858), 1 E. & E. 267).

Where a statute refers generally to powers of enforcing obedience, those powers will be the ordinary powers of the court in which proceedings are to be taken (*Green v. Consequences of Non-observance. It will not, however, be held, in the absence of clear language, that Parliament intended to destroy the common law rights of the King's subjects by placing them at the mercy of irresponsible tribunals or of an irresponsible State department (g). Where, therefore, a particular question has been raised before a special tribunal, and has also come in independent proceedings before a court of law competent to deal with it and to restrain the proceedings before the special tribunal, it may be just and convenient to restrain the proceedings before the special tribunal until the court has determined the question (h).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Public Remedies.

Indictment etc.

374. Every breach of a statutory command, or of a rule made under statutory powers (i), is, in the absence of specific provisions (k), indictable at common law as a misdemeanour (l), and in the absence of special remedy created by statute the performance of public duties may be enforced by indictment or by information filed by the Attorney-General (m).

375. In addition to the common law remedy of indictment, and any specific remedies provided by the statute in question, the Attorney-General may at any time (n) apply to the High Court to exercise its equitable jurisdiction of granting an injunction against the breach of a statutory duty or the infringement or threatened infringement of a public right (o), and an individual who, save as one of the public, has sustained no special damage can only do so in the Attorney-General's name (p). Such remedy is conveniently resorted to when the exercise of powers by public bodies (q), statutory companies (r), or companies trading under the Companies Acts (s), is in question. The exercise of this jurisdiction is, however, a matter for the discretion of the court (t).

Injunction.

376. Where no special sanction is attached to the enforcement of a statutory duty affecting the public, the High Court, in the exercise of its discretion (a), may grant a mandamus that justice may be done (b). A mandamus is, however, never addressed for this purpose to the Crown (c), and the court in the exercise of its discretion refuses to grant a mandamus where specific remedies can be resorted to (d).

377. A penalty created by statute, if nothing is said as to who may recover it, and if it is not created for the benefit of a party aggrieved, and the offence is not against an individual, belongs to the Crown, and the Crown alone can sue for it (e).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Private Remedies.

damage.

378. Notwithstanding the fact that a breach of a statutory duty may in some circumstances be excused so far as penal consequences are concerned (f), any person who has sustained injury from the non-performance of a statutory duty can claim damages from the person on whom the duty is imposed, where such non-performance amounts to a breach of a duty owed to the person injured (g).

Measure of damages.

379. The damages recoverable in respect of a breach of statutory duty may either be imposed by the terms of the statute imposing the duty, or be such as are contemplated by the statute, and flow directly from the breach (h). Such terms may preclude a defendant from raising the defences usually open in an action on the case (i).

Injunction.

380. The remedy by injunction, as a mode of preventing that being done which if done would be an infringement of a right, is open to individuals, even if such right is the creation of statute, and,

SECT. 1.
Consequences
of Non-observance.

SUB-SECT. 4.—Illegal Transactions,

381. Every transaction forbidden by a statute and carried out in violation of it is primâ facie illegal and therefore void (l). An act for the doing of which a penalty is imposed is, subject to what is stated above (m), a thing forbidden (n).

Forbidden
transactions.

A contract involving the doing of an act forbidden by statute (o) is, like any other contract which is contrary to law (p), unenforceable, and no action will lie upon it (q). It is immaterial that no specific penalty is attached to the doing of the thing forbidden (r). There may, however, be cases in which such a contract will be recognised if the party seeking to enforce it is not privy to the illegality (s).

Avoidance

Ch.; title CONTRACT, Vol. VII. p. 487.

SECT. 1.
Consequences
of Non-observance.

Tendency of the court.

382. The court has always drawn a distinction between statutes denying a legal effect to instruments, by declaring them to be void to all intents and purposes, and statutes which merely require formalities to be observed (t), and the court will not readily construe contracts so as to bring them within the prohibition of a statute (a). The test to be applied is, as a rule, whether the statute was passed to enforce some object of public policy or conduct, or for some indirect object, such as facilitating the collection of revenue (b).

Effect of repeals, &c.

383. A contract void at the time of its making as being contrary to statute is not rendered valid by the subsequent repeal of such statute (c). On the other hand, on the principle that statutes should have no retrospective operation, a contract not forbidden at the time it was entered into is not, in the absence of express words, rendered unenforceable by the subsequent enactment of a statute forbidding such contracts (d).

Prescriptive title.

384. Prescriptive title cannot be proved by acts prohibited by statute: such acts do not become lawful for this purpose if the statute is repealed (e).

Contracts
partly illegal.

385. An illegal term in a contract does not vitiate the whole, if the good part is not dependent on the bad (f). It is otherwise if the considerations are not severable (g).

SECT. 2.—Performance of Statutory Obligation Excused.

Excuses.

386. Ignorance of the law does not excuse (h), but the performance of a statutory obligation is excused if rendered impossible by the act of God (i), or by the operation of a subsequently enacted statute (j). The subsequently enacted statute, however, need not wholly prevent the performance of the obligation (k), and in so far as the obligation remains possible of performance, it must be fulfilled (l).

SECT. 2.
Performance of Statutory Obligation
Excused.

387. A covenant which has been rendered impossible of performance by a subsequent statute is generally unenforceable at law (m), for, in the absence of an absolute covenant, persons must be taken to have contracted with reference to the law at the time it was made (n). The fact, however, that a special statute has given a remedy over against the promoters to persons compelled by it to break contracts is cogent ground for assuming that Parliament did not intend a covenantor to be entirely released from his obligations (o).

Release from covenants.

388. The fact that a state of things not in accordance with the provisions of a special statute has been acquiesced in for a long period may be ground for a court refusing to enforce such provisions (p). Even with general statutes compliance with provisions inserted for the benefit of classes or individuals need not be insisted on by the court (q), though it is otherwise where conditions have been imposed in the public interest (r).

Acquiescence.

The reasons upon which these rules have been founded have received expression in various statutory enactments, whereby the right to enforce both statutory and common law obligations has been restricted (s).

Part IX.—Repeals.

SECT. 1.—Operation of Repealing Enactments.

391. A repealing statute, in the absence of saving clauses, operates from its commencement, whether the alteration of the law affected by it has to do with procedure or with matter of substance (h), and a repealed Act, in the absence of saving clauses, and except as to transactions passed and closed, must be considered as if it had never existed (i).

SECT. 1.
Operation of Repealing Enactments.

repeal.

392. A statute is repealed by implication in the following cases, namely:—

Repeal by implication.

(1) If its provisions are wholly incompatible with a subsequent statute (k);

(2) If the two standing together would lead to wholly absurd consequences;

(3) If the entire subject-matter of the first is taken away by the second (l).

Repeal by implication, which, whenever it occurs, is the consequence of inconsistent legislation, is never to be favoured, and should not be imputed to Parliament (m). It is not to be implied from a mere recital (n), or schedule (o), or from non-user (p).

393. Certain provisions of a repealed enactment may be preserved in a repealing and amending Act by necessary implication (q).

Saving by implication.

394. A repeal may be specifically qualified, and before the 31st December, 1889, every repealing section usually contained, or ought to (p) White v. Boot (1788), 2 Term Rep. 274.

(q) Thus, where a section of a local Act dealing with the construction and maintenance of artisans' dwellings was repealed and replaced by one setting up a different scheme of building, provisions in the repealed section as to selling and letting were implied in the Amendment Act (Wigram v. Fryer (1887), 36 Ch. D. 87). As to the effect of the repeal of an enactment giving a short title to another Act, see p. 203, post.

SECT. 1. have contained, complicated savings so as to prevent any interference. Since the operation of the Interpretation Act, 1889 (s), automatically attached to a repeal. Unless the contrary intention appears, no repeal is to :

- Repealing Enactments.
- (1) Revive anything not in force or existing at the time when the repeal takes effect (t);
 - (2) Affect the previous operation of any enactment so repealed, or anything duly done (u) or suffered under any enactment so repealed;
 - (3) Affect any right, privilege, obligation, or liability acquired, accrued, or incurred under any enactment so repealed;
 - (4) Affect any penalty, forfeiture, or punishment incurred in respect of any offence committed against any enactment so repealed;
 - (5) Affect any investigation, legal proceeding, or remedy in respect of any such right, privilege, obligation, liability, penalty, forfeiture, or punishment; and any such investigation, legal proceeding, or remedy may be instituted, continued, or enforced, and any such penalty, forfeiture, or punishment may be imposed as if the repealing Act had not passed (v).

Vested rights.

395. Savings from a repealing clause preserve vested rights both against the operation of the general repeal clause itself and also against that of the previous clauses of the Act (w).

Statute Law Revision Act.

396. A Statute Law Revision Act does not alter the law, but simply strikes out certain enactments which have become unnecessary (a). It invariably contains elaborate provisoes (b).

Revival of repealed statute.

397. A repealed statute can only be revived by express enactment (c); but one which has been in abeyance, or shorn of its original force by the imposition of a condition, may, it seems, be restored upon repeal of that condition (d).

(r) As to the effect of these savings, see Re Busfield, Whaley v. Busfield, (1886), 32 Ch. D. 123, 131, C. A.; Hume v. Somerton (1890), 25 Q. B. D. 239; Re E., [1906] 1 Ch. 730, C. A.

(s) 52 & 53 Vict. c. 63.

(t) Prior to the passing of Lord Brougham's Act, stat. (1850) 13 & 14 Vict. c. 21, there was an inconvenient common law rule that when an Act was repealed the repeal ipso facto revived any enactment which that Act had repealed (The Bishops' Case (1606), 12 Co. Rep. 7).

SECT. 2.—*Substitution and Re-enactment.*SECT. 2.
Substitution and Re-enactment.

Substitution.

398. If after a right has been granted by the Crown, either upon the footing of an extant charter or by prescription, which assumes the former existence of such a charter, a statute creates the same right, or larger or different rights of the same nature and character, in favour of the grantee, the statutory rights emanating from the paramount authority supersede those held from the Crown alone (e), and henceforward the rights continue by virtue of the statute, so that, when the statute is repealed, the rights derived from the Crown alone do not revive (f). It may, however, appear that on the proper construction of the statute Parliament intended to leave the old rights subsisting by the side of the new statutory rights and obligations (g).

399. In construing a codifying statute (h) the proper course is, in the first instance, to examine its language and to ask what is its natural meaning. It is an inversion of the proper order of consideration to start with inquiring how the law previously stood, and then, assuming that it was probably intended to leave it unaltered, to see if the words of the enactment will bear interpretation in conformity with this view (i). After the language has been examined without presumptions, resort may be had to the previous state of the law for the construction of provisions of doubtful import, or of words which have acquired a technical meaning (k). If a distinction is to be drawn between statutes which codify and those which consolidate the law (l), it is that in construing the latter there is a presumption that the law was not intended to be altered (m).

(h) As, for instance, the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61). The object of a codifying statute has been said to be that on any point specifically dealt with by it the law should be ascertained by interpreting the language used, instead of roaming over a number of authorities (Robinson v. Canadian Pacific Rail. Co., [1892] A. C. 481, P. C.).

SECT. 2.
Substitution and Re-enactment.

References to statutes, repealed.

Re-enactment.

enactments repealed, the repealed statute remains in force until the substituted provisions come into operation (n).

401. Where any statute passed after 1889 repeals and re-enacts, with or without modifications, any provisions of a former statute, references in any other statute are, unless the contrary intention appears, to be construed as references to the provisions so re-enacted (o).

402. Where a section of a repealed statute is re-enacted in the repealing statute, such section is generally held to be retrospective (p). It does not, however, operate as a repeal of an enactment made subsequently to the re-enacted section and inconsistent with it (q).

SECT. 3.—Repeal of Provisions Incorporated in Another Statute.

Revival.

403. If a statute passed after 1850 repeals a repealing enactment, it does not revive any enactment previously repealed, unless words are added to that particular effect (r). The repeal of a condition annexed to a statute by a later statute may, however, have the effect of reviving the former in its entirety (s).

Inconsistent provisions.

404. A section of an earlier statute may by implication be repealed by provisions in a later statute enacting and substituting matters inconsistent with it (a). On the other hand, provisions of an earlier statute adopted by a later statute will not be repealed by the repeal of the former (b).

(n) Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 11 (2), re-enacting Lord Brougham's Act, stat. (1850) 13 & 14 Vict. c. 21, s. 6. This section gets over difficulties raised in cases like R. v. M'Kenzie (1820), Russ. & Ry. 429. But it may be that if an Act giving a plaintiff certain rights (e.g., as to costs) upon some condition precedent being fulfilled is repealed before such condition has been complied with, his rights are lost (Butcher v. Henderson (1868), L. R. 3 Q. B. 335).

(o) Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 38 (1). Even though the effect be to enlarge the scope of it (Stevens v. General Steam Navigation Co., [1903] 1 K. B. 890, C. A.). But an intention to extend its operation will not be presumed (Brown v. McLachlan (1872), L. R. 4 P. C. 543); compare, however, Bank of England v. Vagliano Brothers, [1891] A. C. 107. This rule is of special importance in the case of Consolidation Acts, which, dealing with definite subjects, may fail to embody or exhaust references in other statutes dealing with different subject-matters.

Public Acts.

405. The courts have always taken judicial notice of public general statutes (c), and every statute passed since 1850, whether public or private, is to be deemed to be a public statute, and as such is to be judicially noticed unless the contrary is expressly provided (d). Local, personal, and private Acts passed before 1850, unless providing that they are to be deemed public Acts and judicially noticed as such (e), or that they are to be printed by the King's Printer, and that a copy so printed is to be admitted as evidence, must be pleaded and proved (f) by an exemplification under the Great Seal, or by a copy sworn to have been compared with the Parliament roll (g).

But such a clause in a private Act did not fix strangers with notice of them (Brett v. Beales (1829), Mood. & M. 416, 421; Ballard v. Way (1836), 1 M. & W. 520; A.-G. v. Marrett (1846), 10 I. (g) "If they be entered in the Parliament roll, and always allowed for Acts of Parliament, it shall be intended that it was by authority of Parliament" (The Prince's Case (1606), 8 Co. Rep. 1 a, 20 b). After the Royal Assent was given the Clerk of the Parliaments transcribed every public Act on to a roll, which was delivered into Chancery, and was considered the only record (Willes Claim of Peerage (1869), L. R. 4 H. L. 126). Private Acts were not enrolled without the suit of the party (Thomas' note to The Prince's Case in Coke's Reports, Vol. IV., p. 180, published 1826, by Butterworth & Son), and the difficulties of proof which might arise if the private Act had not been enrolled and got lost may be seen from the evidence offered and rejected in Doe d. Bacon v. Brydges (Lady) (1843), 6 Man. & G. 282. The practice of engrossing Acts, whether public or private, upon rolls of Parliament was discontinued in 1849, soon after the passing of the Evidence Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 113), since when the recognised record is the copy printed by the King's Printer (Claydon v. Green (1868), L. R. 3 C. P. 511, per WILLES, J., at p. 522); but there are still two prints on vellum made, one retained by the Clerk of the Parliaments, the other sent to the Record Office.

that they were so printed (h). Since June, 1882, such Acts, as well as proclamations, orders, regulations, and rules, when directed to be evidence or conclusive evidence when printed by the King's Printer or otherwise under His Majesty's authority, are to be such evidence if purporting to be printed under the superintendence or authority of His Majesty's Stationery Office (i).

407. Colonial and foreign statutes must be proved, the former by a certified copy, as directed by the Colonial Laws Validity Act, 1865 (k), or by a copy purporting to be printed by the Government Printer (l), the latter by the evidence of a jurist of the foreign country or other expert (m).

408. Rules, bye-laws, and proclamations made under the authority of statute should be proved in the manner provided by the statute under which they are made; where no special provision is contained in such statute, they may be evidenced by a copy printed by the King's Printer or under the superintendence of the Stationery Office (n). In case such evidence is not available, or is disputed, they must be proved in the appropriate manner (o).

409. A statute may be cited in any other statute, and in any instrument or document, by its short title, if any, either with or without reference to the chapter, or by reference to the regnal year in which it was passed, and any enactment may be cited by reference to the section or sub-section of the Act in which it is contained. Where there are more statutes or sessions than one in the same regnal year, the citation should specify the statute or the session, as the case may require, and where there are more chapters than one the number of the chapter (p).

410. Under an order of the House of Lords every Bill must now have a short title, and if the Bill becomes law, a section of the Act defines the short title by which it may be cited (q).

(p) Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 35 (1). The year is almost invariably part of a short title; for an instance to the contrary, see the Army Act (44 & 45 Vict. c. 58), as amended by the Army (Annual) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 4), s. 4. While the short title alone appears in the text of an Act, it is customary to print in the margin the regnal year and the number of the chapter.

(q) Before the days of short titles most Acts of general importance acquired nicknames, but in formal documents they could only be referred to by their full legal title. For example, the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43), before its short title was bestowed on it, in 1889, was familiarly known among lawyers as "Jervis' Act"; but the only legal way of referring to it in a Bill or Act was as "An Act of the session of the 11th and 12th years of the reign of Her present Majesty Queen Victoria, chapter 43, intituled, An Act to facilitate the performance

To facilitate the citation of Acts of Parliament passed before the universal institution of short titles, the Short Titles Act, 1896 (r), schedules some hundreds of Acts, ranging from 1851 to 1893, and bestows on them short titles by which they may be cited. It provides that, notwithstanding the repeal of an enactment giving a short title to an Act, it may, without prejudice to any other mode of citation, continue to be cited by the short title (s).

411. The Short Titles Act, 1896 (r), further provides for giving collective titles to various groups of statutes dealing with the same subject-matter (t), and enacts that if it is provided that any Act passed after that Act may, as to the whole or any part thereof, be cited with any of the groups of Acts mentioned in the second schedule to that Act, or with any group of Acts to which a collective title has been given by any Act passed before that Act, that group is to be construed as including that Act or part; and if the collective title of the group states the first and last years of the group, the year in which that Act is passed is to be substituted for the last year of the group, and so on, as often as a subsequent Act or part is added to the group (u). (t) Short Titles Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 14), s. 2. For example, there are nineteen Acts, ranging from 1694 to 1892, which regulate the Bank of England. They may all be cited and referred to under the collective title "The Bank of England Acts, 1694 to 1892" (Short Titles Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 14), Sched. II.). Apart from the collective title, when it is necessary to refer to a group of statutes, as, for instance, the Public Health Acts, the only way of doing so is either to enumerate them seriatim, or to refer to the earliest Act and "all other Acts amending or extending it."

(u) Short Titles Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 14), s. 2. It is to be noted that these enactments refer only to the citation of statutes, and not to their construction. If an amending Act is to be construed as well as cited with the group of Acts to which it belongs, express words are inserted to that effect. For instance, the Factory and Workshop Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 39), s. 7, provides as follows: "This Act may be cited as the Factory and Workshop Act, 1907, and shall be construed as one with the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, and the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, and this Act may be cited together as the Factory and Workshop Acts, 1901 and 1907." For another formula bearing on construction, see the Companies Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 50), s. 52.

(a) The Statute Law Committee, first appointed in 1868, completed in 1885 in eighteen volumes quarto a revised edition of the statutes up to 1878, and a second revised edition was in 1909 brought down to the year 1900. A chronological table and index to the statutes is now published annually under the supervision of the Statute Law Committee, and an Index to the Statutory Rules and Orders is published every three years. Quotations from statute. 413. In any statute passed after 1889 a description or citation of a portion of another statute is, unless a contrary intention appears, to be construed as including the word, section, or other part mentioned or referred to as forming the beginning, and as forming the end, of the portion comprised in the description or citation (c).

Part XI.—Evidence Created by Statute.

Preambles and recitals. 414. Preambles and recitals afford strong evidence, perhaps the best (d), of the state of the law when a statute was passed (e), and deposited plans and details of works, when referred to in such preambles or recitals, may usefully be referred to for purposes of interpretation (f). A mere recital, either of fact or law, is not, however, conclusive so as to create an estoppel, to contradict which evidence is not receivable (g), though it carries great weight and may be confirmatory (h).

Private Acts. 415. Recitals in private statutes do not bind those who are not parties to them and who are not within the enacting part (i).

(b) Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 35 (2). Different old editions of the statutes do not always agree; thus, the celebrated seventeenth section of the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3) appears in the revised edition as the sixteenth section, which a reference to the original rolls showed to be correct.

(c) Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 35 (3). It is to be noted that in drafting amendments to Bills a different rule is observed, and that the amendment is construed as only referring to intervening words.

Part XII.—On the Drafting of Statutes.

416. In drafting (l) a public general statute (m), which, as a rule, is based on the hypothesis that the existing law is defective or insufficient and should be changed, it is essential that the draftsman should master the subject-matter to be dealt with, and the method to be employed in dealing with it, and, for that purpose, to ascertain the existing law and practice, the mischief or defects which the law is intended to remove, and the nature of the remedy proposed (n). When, as is usually the case (o), it is intended that the statute should make some alteration in administrative machinery, mastery of the subject-matter will include complete knowledge of all relevant details relating to the appropriate administrative authorities, their rights, powers, duties and liabilities, and the manner of carrying out and the effect of the proposed alteration (p).

Preliminary considerations for the draftsman.

When the existing law and practice, and the defects which the law is intended to remove, have been ascertained, it is right to consider to what extent parliamentary legislation is required, and whether the object proposed cannot be obtained by administrative regulation under existing powers (q).

Consideration of alternative remedies.

Hill*, [1901] 1 Ch. 842, 852. The statements of fact recited in Divorce Bills are still formally proved, and formerly it was the practice to refer evidence in support of all private Bills to the judges who reported on it (The Wharton Peerage (1845), 12 Cl. & Fin. 295, 302; The Shrewsbury Peerage (1858), 7 H. L. Cas. 1, 12).

(n) As to the cases in which, when a doubtful question of construction arises, the courts are entitled to consider the previous law and practice, see p. 144, ante.

(o) Reference to the Statute Book shows how small is the proportion of enactments which alter the rules or principles of the common law.

(p) The necessity of such intimate knowledge will be appreciated if, to take two examples only where instances can be multiplied, the Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), and the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1912 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 20), are examined and analysed in the light of statutory and case law at the time when they were passed.

(q) By rules or Orders in Council; see p. 123, ante. The draftsman, having considered these points, will probably embody the results in a memorandum, both for his own assistance and for that of those on whom

ment: simple and complex
statutes.

A logical arrangement facilitates administration: general clauses preceding special and subordinate provisions.

417. The arrangement of a statute is a matter of supreme importance. A statute may be either simple or complex, simple when its principle can be declared in one clause, complex when several distinct principles have to be enunciated (r). Whatever deviation in the arrangement of principles as between themselves may be rendered necessary in particular cases, it is essential for perspicuity that every principle should be separated from every other principle, and should form the subject of a distinct enacting clause (s) or series of clauses (t).

In the arrangement of a Bill administrative convenience should not be lost sight of. The rules of law to be observed having been laid down, the authority to administer them should be defined, followed by the procedure to be observed in administering them (a). Last of all should come provisions which are special (b) or exceptional (c), transitory or temporary (d), saving clauses, definitions (e), limitations as to the extent of operation (f) and devolves the duty of carrying the measure through Parliament. The memorandum accompanying the Real Property Bill and the Conveyancing Bill, introduced in 1913 by Lord HALDANE, L.C., in the House of Lords, was presented to the House as a Return to an Order, and printed (14th July, 1913).

(r) The Qualification of Women (County and Borough Councils) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 33), is a good example of the simple statute; the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), which is divided into fourteen parts, of the complex.

(s) As to enacting clauses and sections, see p. 121, ante.

(t) A Bill should state at the outset, if possible, the main principle or principles which underlie it, for it is with main principles that Parliament is chiefly concerned. The Succession Duty Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 51), s. 2, and the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 59), ss. 3, 4, 5 and 6, are good instances of this rule carried into practice. Sometimes, as with the Land Drainage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 133), it has been found advisable to connect principal with subordinate enacting clauses by words of reference. When, as with the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), there are several parts, each introduced by headings, and each virtually forming a single measure, an enunciation of principle should lead each new part.

(a) Put in another way, normal and general provisions should come first, the simpler preceding the more complex, followed by those subordinate provisions which are required to give the former effect, such as penalty clauses, and power to make bye-laws.

(b) Such as those relating to special places, or special classes of persons or things; see, for instance, Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 53), ss. 4, 5.

(c) As, for instance, the Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), s. 23, providing for the transfer of the Yorkshire registries of deeds to the county council.

(d) Such as were rendered necessary on the passing of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66). Coming at the end of an Act, such provisions can be repealed without interfering with the framework of the whole.

(e) Each part of a complex statute may require a definition clause, which in this case generally comes first; see Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 267. Logically definitions should come first, but in practice in modern statutes they are put at the end, because amendments made in the substantive provisions may render them superfluous or inept.

(f) For examples, see Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 22), ss. 159, 160.

duration (g), repeals (h), and a short-title clause (i). Details may be relegated to schedules (k), or left to be provided for by rules (l).

418. Statutes may be divided into parts (m), and clauses may be grouped under separate headings where it is intended to enable provisions to be incorporated with other statutes (n), or where in the same statute certain provisions are to be applied to a different subject-matter (o).

419. Referential legislation, while improper where those whose duty it is to approve it and those who are to be bound by it must look beyond the four corners of a statute in order to comprehend it (p), is proper when the object of the reference is to incorporate certain general Acts, or parts of general Acts, made for and adapted to incorporation (q).

420. Consolidation Bills should preserve substance, omit nothing, and make necessary drafting alterations (r), but as a rule they should not aim at amendment (s).

421. The following general rules may be laid down with regard to the language of statutes:—

(1) Sentences should be short and expressed in simple and untechnical language (t).

(2) Words must not be used with different meanings, nor different words to express the same thing (a).

PART XII.

Drafting of Consolidation Bills.

General rules:

simplicity of language;

uniform meaning of words;

(g) See p. 157, ante.

(h) Repeals which are consequential on the proposed Bill may be scheduled only. But those which raise a point of substance should be brought to the attention of Parliament by insertion in a clause.

(i) See p. 202, ante.

(k) See the schedules to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 58), and the Shops Act, 1912 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 3).

(l) As by the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 581, and the National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 7.

(m) See p. 121, ante. Such is now the usual practice in Consolidation Acts; see the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 22); Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 67); Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 69).

(n) As to headings, see p. 121, ante; and see the text, infra.

(o) See, for instance, the Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41).

(p) Knill v. Towse (1889), 24 Q. B. D. 186, per MATHEW, J., at p. 195.

(q) Thus, when powers of acquiring land are to be taken, the machinery of the Lands Clauses Acts (as defined in the Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 23) is usefully embodied with them.

(r) Alteration of language may be necessary for the sake of clearness and consistency; for similar expressions may have been held to bear different meanings in the different Acts which it is intended to consolidate.

(s) It is often advisable to pass amending statutes dealing with particular points with a view to repealing and re-enacting them almost immediately in a Consolidation Act. Thus, the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 69), repealed the Companies Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 50), and the Companies Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 12).

(t) For every superfluous word may give rise to contention. A dictum attributed to Sir J. F. STEPHEN is that the precision attained in a statute should reach a degree which even a person reading in bad faith cannot misunderstand. Technical language may at times be unavoidable, as, for instance, in real property statutes, but, as a rule, technical terms should be dealt with by interpretation clauses; see p. 131, ante.

(3) A statute is to be regarded as always speaking. Hence "shall" may be always construed as imperative, and "if," providing for a particular case, should be followed by the indicative.

(4) The words "hereinbefore" and "hereinafter" are to be avoided, as raising a doubt whether they refer to the clause in which they occur or to the whole Bill.

(5) Expressions of doubtful import, as "it shall be lawful," "it shall and may be lawful," or "shall be empowered," should not be used, excepting where it is intended to exempt a person from an obligation or a disability to which he would otherwise be subject (b). If the law is imperative, the proper auxiliary of the predicate is "shall"; if permissive, "may" (c).

(6) Principles should be stated in general terms and tested for particular cases (d); but the enumeration of particular cases should be avoided and, when a rule is subject to qualifications, exceptions, or restrictions, the statement of these should follow the statement of the rule (e).

(7) A statute, being intended to confer rights or impose duties, should make it clear on whom the rights are conferred and the duties imposed (f). Where no sanction is available, it should provide one (g); and a penal enactment should put beyond question whether scienter is of the essence of the offence (h).

(8) When a statute authorises expenditure which is to be provided for by taxation, the sums required must be made payable either out of the Consolidated Fund or out of the annual vote (i). In the first case the sum must be made payable "out of the Consolidated Fund or the growing produce thereof," and in the second case "out of money provided by Parliament" (k).

(9) When a statute creates an offence which is to be dealt with by justices, it is sufficient to make it punishable "on summary

(see pp. 129, 130, ante), such should not be used to convey different ideas from those which are associated with them in the minds not only of lawyers, but often of laymen.

(b) As, for instance, "It shall be lawful for" A. B. not to do a specified act.

(c) But having regard to the cases in which the courts have construed "may" as mandatory (see p. 171, ante), it is frequently expedient to put the meaning of a particular clause beyond question by adopting an expression like "the court may in its discretion" etc.

(d) The draftsman must employ a generality of expression and a looseness of framework, which will weather the stress of the committee stage (see title PARLIAMENT, Vol. XXI., pp. 708 et seq.), and not be thrown out of gear by a chance amendment.

(e) See the Bishops Resignation Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 111), ss. 11, 12.

(f) Hence the active "shall do" or "may do" is to be preferred to the passive "shall be done" or "may be done."

(g) A breach of a statutory duty may give to an individual a right of action for damages (see pp. 174, 192, ante; and see title TORT, p. 483, post); but where some public object is to be secured, it is inconvenient to rely solely on the rule that every breach of a statutory command is indictable as a common law misdemeanour; see p. 190, ante.

(h) See p. 178, ante, and the cases there cited.

(i) See title PARLIAMENT, Vol. XXI., p. 708.

(k) See, for instance, County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 23; Irish Land Act, 1903 (3 Edw. 7, c. 37), ss. 29, 52 (4).

conviction," for the use of this phrase automatically incorporates all the provisions of the Summary Jurisdiction Acts (l).

(10) The object of the Interpretation Act, 1889 (m), is to promote brevity and uniformity in the language of statutes. Its definitions and rules of construction, therefore, apply automatically unless the contrary be expressed. Its provisions must always be borne in mind in drafting, and, if it is intended to vary or depart from them, this must be done in express terms (n).

Part I.—Introductory.

SECT. 1.—The Constitution of the London Stock Exchange.

422. The constitution of the London Stock Exchange (a) is regulated by a deed of settlement executed in 1886. The proprietors are an unincorporated company (b), and are represented by a body of nine managers, who act as landlords of the building, and fix and alter at their discretion the terms of admission of members (c) and their clerks.

423. Under the provisions of the deed of settlement the members elect annually thirty of their number as a committee for general purposes. This committee is empowered to make the rules and regulations of the Stock Exchange, which, by the deed of settlement, may from time to time be amended, repealed or altered (d). The maintenance of good order and government amongst the members in accordance with these rules and regulations is entrusted to the committee, which also regulates the transaction of business on the Stock Exchange (e). The committee is responsible for the publication of the official list of prices, and is empowered to determine what securities are to be quoted therein (f).

The committee has power to decide a dispute between members as to whether a contract has been fulfilled in accordance with the rules of the Stock Exchange, and its decision is final (g).

The committee may dispense with the strict enforcement of any of the rules and regulations, but it has no jurisdiction to pass a resolution effecting an alteration of a contract between the parties (h).

SECT. 1. The Constitution of the London Stock Exchange.

Deed of settlement.
The committee and its powers.

(a) There are also local Stock Exchanges, as for instance, at Liverpool and Manchester. Broadly speaking, their rules are modelled on those of the London Stock Exchange.

(b) See Watson v. Slack (1885), 16 Q. B. D. 270. As to unincorporated companies generally, see title COMPANIES, Vol. V., pp. 12 et seq.

(c) The admission of members to the Stock Exchange is at present regulated by Rules 21—50 of the Stock Exchange Rules, 1911. A candidate for admission must, as a rule, find three members to be his sureties in the event of his default within five years; and such sureties must not be indemnified (ibid., r. 32 (1)).

The court will construe the rules of the Stock Exchange to see whether the committee had power under them to take cognisance of the matter in dispute (Smith v. Reynolds, supra).

SECT. 1.
The Constitution of the London
Stock Exchange.

424. The Stock Exchange does not recognise in its dealings any parties other than its own members. All members, therefore, are in the position of principals in their dealings with each other (i).
 Upon the death of a partner in a stockbroker's business the goodwill of the business may be sold, unless there is something in the deed of partnership to prevent a sale (j).

SECT. 2.—Definitions.

Jobber.

425. A "broker" is a member of the Stock Exchange whose business is to deal in securities for non-members who employ him in that behalf (k).

A "jobber" or "dealer" is a member of the Stock Exchange who deals with other members as a principal (l).

Settlements.

426. "Settlements" are the periodical occasions fixed for the settlement of bargains. The "Consols settlement" occurs monthly, and consists of (1) "Contango day," on which stock which is not to be taken up is carried over; (2) "Making-up day," on which tickets are passed to bring together the ultimate seller and ultimate purchaser of stock which is to be taken up; and (3) "Account day," also called "Settling day" or "Pay day," on which all differences on carrying over and on passing tickets have to be paid, and on which also securities may be delivered and, if delivered, must be paid for. The ordinary settlement occurs fortnightly, and consists of a "General Contango day," a "Making-up or Ticket day," and an "Account day," and, in addition, a "Mining Contango day" for the carrying over of mining securities (m).

The period between two Account days is spoken of as an "Account."

Special
 settlements.

"Special settlements" are the occasions specially appointed for the first settlement of bargains in new issues.

Carry-over.

427. "Carry-over" or "continuation" consists of two operations, namely:—(1) a repurchase for the current account of securities sold for that account (or conversely a resale of securities bought) effected in order to close an existing bargain; and (2) a new sale or purchase, as the case may be, for the new account (n).

By the Stock Exchange Rules, 1911, r. 72, members are prohibited from suing each other except by consent or by leave of the committee.

(k) See pp. 218 et seq., post.

(l) See p. 225, post. Members may not act in the dual capacity of broker and jobber (Stock Exchange Rules, 1911, rr. 85, 86), and may only change from the one category to the other on one month's notice to the committee (ibid., r. 22).

(m) Stock Exchange Rules, 1911, r. 89.

(n) See p. 231, post.

"Contango" is the consideration paid to the seller by a purchaser desiring to carry over a bargain; it is usually reckoned either at a price per share or as a percentage on the price of the security (o). SECT. 2.
Definitions.
Contango.

428. "Backwardation" is the consideration for postponing the completion of a bargain paid to the purchaser by a seller who is unable or unwilling to deliver; it is usually reckoned in the same way as contango. Backwardation.

429. "Making-up" consists in the setting off against each other of two converse bargains made between the same parties or parties brought together by the passing of tickets. Making-up.

"Making-down" consists in one of two parties who have dealt together agreeing, by a fresh contract, to accept a third person in substitution for the party with whom he originally dealt. Making-down.

"Taking-in" is a carrying over done either by the original seller of the securities, or by a third party who pays the original seller and enters into a contract with the purchaser for a sale to him of the securities for the new account (p). Taking-in.

430. "Ticket" is a document issued by a purchaser who intends to take up the securities purchased. It is issued on or before ticket day, and contains an intimation that the issuer will pay for the securities and a statement of the name and address of the person into whose name he wishes the securities transferred. The ticket is handed by the purchaser to his immediate seller, and, if the latter does not himself intend to deliver, he, in turn, passes it to his seller until it reaches a seller who does intend to deliver (q). Ticket.

431. "Defaulter" is a member of the Stock Exchange publicly declared to be unable to fulfil his engagements. A person declared a defaulter ceases at once to be a member (r). Defaulter.

"Hammering" is the declaration of a member as a defaulter. Hammering.

The "official assignee" is a member appointed by the committee to administer the estates of defaulters (s). Official assignee.

"Hammer price" is a price publicly fixed by the official assignee immediately before the declaration of a defaulter. All members having accounts open with a defaulter must close their bargains with him at this price and pay to or claim from the official assignee the difference, if any, between the bargain price and the hammer price (t). These differences are called "hammer price differences." Hammer price.

Part II.—Relation between Parties to Stock Exchange Transactions.

SECT. 1. Broker and Client.

Character of relation.

SECT. 1.—Broker and Client.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Fiduciary Relation.

432. The relation of a stockbroker to his client, though not strictly that of a trustee to his cestui que trust, is of a fiduciary character (u), and money placed in a stockbroker's hands by his client for investment (v), money coming into his hands as the proceeds of the sale of his client's securities (x), and securities which belong to his client (y) may be followed (a).

Payments into bank.

433. A stockbroker may, however, properly pay into his current account at his bank a cheque received from a client for the express purpose of taking up stock purchased by him for that client (b), and there may well be cases in which he may be acting properly in doing so, even though his current account be overdrawn. A banker receiving money from a stockbroker is not bound to inquire into the source from which the broker has received the money; he may, therefore, retain it against a debt due from the broker even if he knows it to be money received by the broker on account of a client, unless he has reason to believe that it is being dealt with in fraud of the client (c).

Pledges to bank.

The same principle applies to securities pledged by a stockbroker with his bank. Brokers in the ordinary course of business are employed to sell and to buy and to raise money upon as well as to keep in custody the securities of their clients, and, consequently, the banker is entitled to assume, in the absence of indications to the contrary, that the broker has full authority to deal with a client's securities (d).

Running account.

434. The fiduciary character of the relation between broker and client does not extend to differences arising in favour of the client upon speculative bargains carried over (e) from account to account where, upon the facts, it appears, not that the broker is a trustee in respect of each item, but that there is a running account the balance of which is to be paid to or received by the client as the case may be (f).

SECT. 1.
Broker and Client.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Duties of Broker to Client.

435. A broker, who has bought securities for a client (g), is under no obligation to resell them (h) or to procure them to be carried over for his client (i) or to make down the bargain with another broker (j). Limits on broker's duties.

A broker accepting an order (k) does not warrant that he will execute it at all events, but only that he will use reasonable diligence in the endeavour to do so (l); nor, if he executes the order, does he become a del credere agent (m).

436. A broker employed to sell may not, as a general rule, himself become the purchaser even though he does so at the proper market price current at the time (n), and any such transaction will be set aside by the court at the instance of the client (o). Broker as principal.

If a broker employed to buy does so and adds to the price paid by him and charges the higher price to his client, the transaction amounts to a sale by the broker of his own shares (p), and the transaction does not bind the client even though the broker is prepared to give credit for the amount added by him to the price paid (q).

It is, however, perfectly legal to employ a broker to buy or sell at

- SECT. 1. a fixed price and to give him as his remuneration for his agency any advantage he may obtain in the price (r).
- Broker and Client. A broker may not, without making full disclosure, act for both vendor and purchaser at the same time (s).
- Obedience to instructions. 437. A broker must act in accordance with the instructions of his principal (t). Whether he has acted in accordance with his instructions or not is a question of fact (a).
- If the instructions of the principal are given in such uncertain terms as to be susceptible of two different meanings and the broker bonâ fide adopts one of them, it is not competent to the principal to repudiate what the broker has done as unauthorised because he meant the order to be read in the other sense of which it is equally capable (b).
- Price. 438. Where a broker has accepted orders to buy or sell and no price is fixed by his principal, it is his duty to effect a bargain at once at the best price obtainable (c).
- Where a limit is placed upon the price at which the broker may deal, the order, in the absence of special arrangements, holds good only during the currency of the Stock Exchange Account for which it is given (d).
- Duties as to contract. 439. It is the duty of a broker employed to deal for a client to make for his principal an enforceable contract with a third party (e). If the contract authorised by the principal and that made by the broker with the third party differ as to price (f), or as to quantity (g), no privity of contract is created (h); and the third party can maintain no action on the contract against the client (i).

A broker, however, who is instructed to buy or sell is not bound to do the whole bargain with one third party, but may subdivide it and thus make privity of contract between his client and each of the persons with whom he deals (k).

SECT. I.
Broker and Client.

Where a broker is instructed by several clients at the same time to deal in the same kind of security he is, by custom of the Stock Exchange, permitted to enter into one contract with a jobber in respect of the whole of the securities, the jobber being bound to recognise the fact that the broker is, or may be, acting for more than one client, and to carry out his contract with each client individually (l). Privity of contract is established in such a case between the jobber and the individual clients, even though the one contract made with the jobber contains some shares as to which the broker was dealing for himself (m).

Dividing orders.
Lumping
orders.

440. A broker fails in his duty to make an enforceable bargain when he obtains a mere honourable understanding with a member of the Stock Exchange (n), unless there are circumstances in the case from which an authority so to deal can be established by the broker (o).

Engagements binding in honour

A broker who has effected a bargain for his client with a third party is bound, in the absence of any breach of contract by the client (p), to keep it open until the time for completion has arrived (q).

Keeping bargain open.

441. Where a broker, instructed to carry over a bargain (a), himself takes in (b) the securities, he becomes a principal in the transaction (c). He may, nevertheless, recover differences and his remuneration for so acting from his client provided that he has the consent of his client to the adoption of this method of business. Consent will be presumed where the client knew that the broker had so acted on previous occasions and raised no objection (d), or where the client received notice on the particular occasion of what the broker had done, and did not repudiate his act (e).

Duties in carrying over.

This case is not really an exception to the general rule that contracts made by a broker must agree as to quantity with those authorised by his principal, the ratio decidendi being that the jobber, knowing that the broker may be dealing for more than one client, intends to make as many contracts as there may happen to be persons for whom the broker is dealing (*Consolidated Goldfields of South Africa v. SECT. 1. 442. A broker dealing for a client must, in the absence of instructions to the contrary, deal according to the ordinary rules of the market (f).

Duty to observe rules. 443. It is one of the first duties of every agent to be constantly ready with his account (g), and to communicate the contents of it to his principal (h). For this reason, in an action by a client against a broker, the client is entitled to see his account apart from the rules as to discovery (i), and, indeed, an action lies by the client to enforce production of the account to himself or to any proper person appointed by him (k), but he cannot insist upon its production to a person to whom reasonable objection may be made by the broker (l).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Authority of Broker.

Implied authority 444. A broker employed to do business on a Stock Exchange is, in the absence of anything to show the contrary, taken to be employed on the terms of that Stock Exchange (m), and the authority thus given by a principal to his broker cannot, so far as third parties are concerned, be limited by private instructions given to the broker (n). The authority may, however, be revoked at any time before it has been acted upon (o). Once, however, a broker has made a bargain for his client, his authority to complete it and so rid himself of the personal liability undertaken by him cannot be revoked (p).

Authority to carry over. 445. In the absence of instructions to do so, a broker has no authority to carry over his client's bargains (q). Such instructions will not be implied from the fact that a client who has purchased does not provide money by account day with which to take up the securities bought (r); but an authority to carry over may be implied from instructions to do so given in respect of a previous account and not revoked (s).

SECT. 1.
Broker and Client.

A continuing authority to carry over from account to account is determined by the death of the client (t).

446. A broker who represents himself as possessing the authority of his client warrants the truth of that representation, and is liable in damages to anyone who, relying upon the truth of it, acts to his detriment, whether by entering into a contract with the broker or otherwise (a). Warranty of authority.

The measure of the damages in cases of breach of warranty of authority to make a contract is the loss by the plaintiff of the gain which he would have made had he obtained the contract which the defendant warranted his authority to make (b). Therefore, in assessing the damages, the solvency of the alleged principal must be taken into consideration (c).

In cases where the transaction undertaken on the faith of the broker's warranty of authority does not result in a contract, the principle is the same, and the broker is bound to indemnify the person who has acted upon his false assertion of authority against any damage which is the natural and proximate consequence of his having so acted (d).

In every case of breach of warranty of authority, all costs properly incurred in reliance upon the existence of the authority are recoverable from the broker (e).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Broker's Right of Indemnity.

447. A broker who has properly carried out his instructions is entitled to a full indemnity from his client against any loss or liability incurred by him by reason of his having entered into a contract on behalf of his client (f). This right to indemnity extends Extent of right.

to anticipated liabilities as well as to losses already sustained (g), and a broker is entitled to be put in funds by account day (h) to pay the purchase price of securities bought by him for his client (i).

448. He is not, however, entitled to an indemnity where the loss is caused by his own default, as, for instance, by his failure to keep the bargain open till the time for completion has arrived (k), or by his own unreasonable action (l), or by his having made a payment which he was not legally bound to make (m), or where the transaction is one which is ultra vires the client for whom he has acted (n).

449. A broker is not entitled to an indemnity where he has not fulfilled his duty to his client (o). Thus, he forfeits his right to indemnity where he has assumed the position of a principal towards his client by being himself the purchaser (a) or seller (b) of the shares in which he was instructed to deal. Similarly, he forfeits his right to indemnity when he disobeys the instructions of his principal, as, for instance, where he is instructed to deal through a sub-agent, and instead of doing so makes a contract in which the sub-agent is a principal (c). Nor can he claim an indemnity where he has failed to establish privity of contract between his client and the third party (d), or where the transaction is binding in honour only (e), in which case he may also be liable in damages to his client (f).

Where the client, instead of repudiating the agency of a defaulting broker, elects to treat him as still his agent, the broker is entitled to indemnity notwithstanding his default (g). SECT. 1.
Broker and Client.

SECT. 2.—Client and Jobber.

450. The contract of the jobber with the client on a purchase of securities by the jobber is that at the settling day (h) he will either take them himself, in which case he is bound to accept and register a transfer and to indemnify the seller, or will give the names of one or more transferees to whom no reasonable objection can be made, and who will accept and pay for the securities (i). Nature of the contract.

451. Privity of contract exists between client and jobber, and the client may sue the jobber direct in respect of the contract entered into for him by his broker (j), for the rule of the Stock Exchange making all members principals inter se (k) does not take away the right of the real principal to sue in respect of his own rights in his own name (l). Privity of contract.

SECT. 3.—Runners.

452. A runner or remisier is a person employed by a broker to introduce clients to the broker. The usual terms of such an employment, namely, that the runner is remunerated by a share of the commission earned by the broker from the business introduced by him, and agrees to bear a proportion of any loss which the broker may incur by the failure of persons introduced to fulfil their obligations, does not constitute a partnership between the runner and the broker (m), and such an arrangement, being a contract of indemnity on the part of the runner rather than a guarantee, does not require to be in writing (a) under the Statute of Frauds (b). Relation of runner to broker.

There is no custom of the Stock Exchange entitling a runner who is remunerated by a share of commission to participate in charges paid to the broker for carrying over (c). Remuneration.

SECT. 3.
Runners.
Authority.

453. The authority of the runner to bind the broker, or the person introduced, depends upon the particular circumstances of each case. The mere fact that the broker has accepted some orders given to the runner is not sufficient to render him liable on subsequent orders given to and accepted by the runner but not communicated to or acted upon by the broker (d).

Part III.—Course of Business.

SECT. 1.—Rules and Customs.

How far incorporated in contracts.

454. Contracts upon the London Stock Exchange are made subject to the rules and regulations of that institution, and notice that this is the case is invariably given on the face of the contract note (e). The rules, therefore, are incorporated in the contract, and are binding upon members of the public who instruct their brokers to deal upon that Stock Exchange (f). Customs (g) only bind the client of a broker in so far as either they are known to him or are in themselves reasonable (h).

A rule or custom which involved a violation of the law of the land would be utterly void and of no effect against the outside world (i).

Effect of employing a broker.

455. Where a person employs a broker to do business upon a Stock Exchange he should, in the absence of anything to show the contrary, be taken to have employed the broker according to the rules and customs of that Stock Exchange (j).

Rules or customs, however, which are applicable only to the domestic forum of the Stock Exchange do not bind outsiders (k).

(d) Spooner v. Browning, [1898] 1 Q. B. 528, C. A.

(e) As to the contract note, see pp. 228 et seq., post.

(f) Benjamin v. Barnett (1903), 8 Com. Cas. 244, per KENNEDY, J., at pp. 247, 248. It is submitted that the view expressed by KENNEDY, J., and adopted in the text is the correct view. There is, however, a considerable body of authority in favour of the proposition that a client who is ignorant of a rule is not bound by it if it be unreasonable, any more than he would be if it were a custom merely and not a rule; see Perry v. Barnett (1885), 15 Q. B. D. 388, C. A.; Harker v. Edwards (1887), 57 L. J. (Q. B.) 147, C. A.; Smith v. Reynolds (1892), 66 L. T. 808, C. A.; Duncan v. Hill (1873), L. R. 8 Exch. 242, 248, Ex. Ch. In none of these cases, however, was the distinction between a rule and a custom adverted to, and in none of them, except perhaps Perry v. Barnett, supra, were the dicta upon this point necessary for the decision.

(g) "Usages" of the Stock Exchange are almost invariably referred to in the reported cases as "customs," and therefore the word "customs," though not strictly correct, is made use of in this section. For the distinction between usage and custom, see title CUSTOM AND USAGES, Vol. X., pp. 221, 267.

(h) See note (f), supra. As to persons bound by usages, see, generally, title CUSTOM AND USAGES, Vol. X., pp. 266 et seq.; as to proof of a usage, see ibid., pp. 270 et seq.

(i) Re Plumbly, Ex parte Grant (1880), 13 Ch. D. 667, C. A., per JAMES, L.J., at p. 679.

(j) See p. 222, ante.

(k) Levitt v. Hamblet, [1901] 2 K. B. 53, C. A.; Ponsolle v. Webber, 456. The existence of a custom is a question of fact for the jury in each case (l), but where a custom has been frequently proved in courts of law the courts will take judicial notice of it without proof, and treat it as part of the law merchant (m).

SECT. 1.
Rules and Customs.
Recognition of customs.

SECT. 2.—The Contract.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Formation and Nature of Contract.

457. The contract for the purchase and sale of shares is, in practice, made verbally between members of the London Stock Exchange, each making a note of the transaction in his own book, which is the only record of the transaction (n). Verbal contract valid.

A contract for the sale of shares in a joint-stock company is not a contract for the sale of goods within the meaning of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (o), and is therefore enforceable though by parol only (p).

458. Whether any particular security forms an interest in land so as to require that a contract for the sale of it should be in writing under s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds (q) is a question depending upon the constitution of the body issuing the security, and upon the nature of the security itself (r). How far

Shares in companies incorporated by Act of Parliament and owning land are not an interest in land (s). Nor are shares in companies incorporated under the Companies Acts (t), or in joint-stock companies established by deed (a), or in cost-book mining companies (b). Where, on the other hand, land is vested in the shareholders of a corporation, and the corporation has the management only of the land, its shares do represent an interest in land (c).

Mortgage
debentures.

459. Mortgage debentures in the form given in Schedule C to the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (d), do not confer upon their holders an interest in land (e), nor does debenture stock created by a railway company under the provisions of the Companies Clauses Act, 1863 (f), Part III (g). On the other hand, an interest in land is conferred by debentures issued by a company incorporated under the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (h), charging its undertaking and all its property whatsoever, if the company possesses leasehold or freehold property (i).

SUB-SECT. 2.—The Contract Note.

Definition.

460. A contract note is a note sent by a broker or agent to his principal, or by a dealer in stocks or marketable securities to his seller or purchaser, advising him of the sale or purchase of any stock or marketable security. For the purposes of the stamp duties on contract notes, the definition does not include a note sent by a broker or agent to his principal where that principal is himself acting as broker or agent for a principal, and is either a member of a Stock Exchange in the United Kingdom or a person who bonâ fide carries on the business of a stockbroker in the United Kingdom and is registered as such in the list (j) of stockbrokers kept by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue (k).

any person who effects the sale or purchase of any stock or marketable security of the value of £5 or upwards as a broker or agent, and any person who, by way of business, deals or holds himself out as dealing as a principal in any stock or marketable security to the value of £5 or upwards, must forthwith make and execute or transmit a contract note to his principal, or to his vendor or purchaser as the case may be (n).

SECT. 2.
The Contract.

A contract in writing or memorandum between two principals who do not, by way of business, deal or hold themselves out as dealing in stocks or securities, is not a contract note within the above definition. It must, however, be stamped as a memorandum of agreement with a 6d. stamp (o).

462. Every contract note as above defined for or relating to the sale or purchase of any marketable security must be stamped with an ad valorem stamp duty (p), which is to be denoted by an adhesive stamp effectively cancelled by the person by whom the note is made by writing on or across the stamp his name or initials or the name or initials of his firm and the date of his so writing (q).

notes.

Where the contract note is a continuation or carrying over (r) note, though it is made in respect of both a sale and a purchase, it is chargeable with duty on one of those transactions only, and, if different rates are chargeable in respect of the two transactions to which it relates, then with duty on that one of them upon which the rate is the higher (s).

Carrying over.

Where a contract note advises the sale or purchase of more than one description of stock or marketable security, the note must be stamped as though it were as many separate contract notes as there are descriptions of stock or securities included in it (t).

The Contract.

Penalty for not stamping.

for brokerage or agency, and is made recoverable as part of such charge (u).

463. Any person who is under obligation to make and execute or to stamp a contract note, and who either neglects to make and execute one (r) or to stamp it duly (a), incurs a penalty of £20; and if a broker, in this or any other respect, fails to comply with the provisions of the Finance (1909—10) Act, 1910 (b), s. 78 (c), he loses any legal claim to any charge for brokerage, commission, or agency with reference to the transaction in question (d).

Stamp duty on options.

464. The obligations to make and execute and to stamp a contract note apply equally to any contract under which an option is given or taken to purchase or sell any stock or marketable security at a future time at a certain price as it applies to a present sale or purchase (e). Only half the duty chargeable upon a purchase or sale is chargeable upon a contract for an option; if, however, a double option is given or taken under the contract, it is to be deemed to be a separate contract in respect of each option (f).

Where a contract note is made in consequence of the exercise of an option given or taken under a properly stamped contract note, and bears upon its face a certificate by the broker or dealer to the effect that it is so made, it is chargeable with only half of the duty which would otherwise have been chargeable thereon (g).

Contract note in broker's name.

465. Where a broker employed to sell securities gives to the broker of the purchaser a contract note professing to sell in his own name, he becomes liable as a principal to the purchaser (g). As between broker and client, however, the use of the words "bought for" or "sold to" in the contract note does not conclude the question as to what was the real relation between the parties, and either the broker (h) or the client (i) can give evidence to establish the real relationship.

Rectification.

466. The contract note is not necessarily conclusive as to the subject-matter of the transaction in reference to which it is given (k).

A mistake in a contract note may be subsequently rectified

SECT. 2.
The Contract.

SECT. 3.—Continuation.

SUB-SECT. 1.—On Stock Exchange.

467. Continuation or carrying over is in form and in law a sale and repurchase, or a purchase and resale, as the case may be (m). It is a new contract, and not merely getting further time for the performance of the old contract (n). New contract.

A continuation being a contract of sale and repurchase and not a loan, the taker-in (o) becomes the absolute owner of the securities carried over, and is not bound to redeliver the identical securities but an equal amount of similar securities (p). If, therefore, he sells the securities taken in by him and makes a profit thereon, he may retain it to his own use (q). In the case of a loan, however, if the lender sells the securities deposited, the borrower may charge him with the price obtained for them if he finds it his interest to do so (r).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Continuation with Aid of a Bank.

468. It is a frequent practice on the London Stock Exchange for a broker who has been instructed to take in securities for his client, instead of carrying them over on the Stock Exchange, to find the money to do so by depositing them with his banker against an advance. Securities so taken in by a broker and deposited with his bank may be held by the bank against the general balance due to it from the broker (s). Deposit of securities.

469. It is customary for brokers who have taken in clients' securities and pledged them with their bank in the above manner, to charge a contango (t) to their clients exceeding the rate of interest. Contango.

Though this method of postponing the time when the client must make payment for securities purchased is sometimes spoken of as carrying over with a bank, the position of the bank in such a case is that of pledgee or mortgagee, as the case may be, and not that of a taker-in of securities.

SECT. 3.
Continuation.

charged to the brokers by the bank. Such a contango may be recovered by the broker from a client who was aware of the custom (a).

SECT. 4.—Stock Exchange Loans.

Deposit of securities.

470. Stock Exchange loans are loans at interest made by one member to another against a deposit of securities repayable on the next ensuing account day. The loan may be continued from account to account, the amount of the loan being adjusted each account day by repayment of a part if the market price of the securities has fallen, or a further advance corresponding to any rise in the price (b).

Return of securities.

471. Where the securities deposited are negotiable, the lender loses his rights against the securities as pledgee by returning them to the borrower against a cheque which is subsequently dishonoured (c).

Default of borrower.

472. The rule of the London Stock Exchange (d) which provides that in the event of the default of a borrower the lender shall realise his securities within three clear days, unless his creditors consent to a longer delay, or shall take them at a price to be fixed by the officials of the Stock Exchange, is a rule regulating the relations of members inter se, and has no effect upon the principal who stands behind (e).

If a defaulter becomes bankrupt the amount due from him on a Stock Exchange loan, arrived at as prescribed by the rules, is a debt provable in bankruptcy (f).

If the borrower does not repay the loan when due he is declared a defaulter and the securities are dealt with according to the rules applicable to default; see *Ponsolle v. SECT. 5.
Security.

A mortgage is created by contract independently of possession, but a pledge is incomplete without delivery, actual or constructive, of the thing pledged (h).

Securities mortgaged or pledged with a broker to secure the amount due or to become due to him from his client are spoken of as "cover" (i).

Cover.

474. A deposit of share certificates to secure a debt, or as cover, whether accompanied (k) or unaccompanied (l) by a transfer in blank as to the name of the transferee, amounts to an equitable mortgage and not a pledge (n); a fortiori where the legal estate in the shares is transferred to the lender the transaction is a mortgage (n). Examples.

A security given by the deposit of bearer securities has on the other hand been treated as a pledge (o).

475. A mortgagee or pledgee has, by implication of law, the right to submortgage or to repledge the securities to the extent of his own interest therein without an express agreement to that effect (p). Submortgage and repledging

But any attempt to submortgage or to repledge beyond that extent is, apart from the case of negotiable securities, taken bond fide and for value (q), and from cases where the submortgagee or subpledgee has otherwise acquired a good legal title (r), inoperative, and the original mortgagor or pledgor can recover them from the submortgagee or subpledgee upon payment of the amount due from him upon them (s).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Remedies of Lender.

Where time fixed for repayment.

476. Both pledge and mortgage of securities imply a contract that they shall be made effectual to discharge the debt if not paid when due, and, consequently, if there is a time fixed for repayment, and the debt is not then paid, the mortgagee or pledgee of securities may at once sell them without express power to sell and without bringing an action for foreclosure (t).

Where no time fixed.

477. If no time is fixed for repayment, the debt is payable upon demand, and a demand must be made and reasonable notice given before the lender may sell (a).

• Notice.

The notice must be in all respects reasonable, regard being had to the circumstances of the case. It is desirable that it should fix a day for payment and also convey to the mind of the borrower that, if he fails to avail himself of the opportunity given to redeem, the lender will be in a position to enforce his rights (b), but it is not necessary that the notice should state that the lender will sell (c).

In the case of a mortgage the fact that the mortgagee, in giving notice, makes a mistake in the amount due and demands too much is not a ground for invalidating the exercise of his power of sale, and apparently the same principle applies to a notice from a pledgee to a pledgor (d).

S.) 701, in so far as it states that a notice that the pledgee will sell unless an excessive sum be paid immediately is not such a notice as will justify the sale of a pledge, is not borne out by the judgments).

478. The mortgagor or pledgor may redeem at any time before the actual sale (e). On redemption the mortgagee or pledgee must return the identical securities pledged, if capable of identification, or, if he has sold them during the currency of the loan, must account to the mortgagor or pledgor for the proceeds of such sale (f). 479. A mortgagee or pledgee who exercises his power of sale must account to his mortgagor or pledgor for any surplus realised by him over and above the debt, interest and necessary expenses of realisation (g). Surplus after sale.

480. Where securities have been assigned or deposited to secure a debt or as cover in circumstances which constitute a mortgage of them, either legal (h) or equitable (i), a decree of foreclosure may be obtained. Where, however, the transaction amounts to no more than a pledge, foreclosure cannot be obtained and the only remedy of the pledgee is by sale (k). Foreclosure.

notice of prior equities, the subsequent getting in of the legal title does not assist the holder and he takes subject to the prior equities (m). Notice of prior equities is imputed where the circumstances are such as to make it reasonable that inquiry should be made as to the title of the person proposing to deal with the securities (n); thus, a person receiving from another, who is not the registered owner of the securities, a certificate accompanied by a transfer signed in blank by the registered owner is affected with notice of a possible infirmity in the title of him from whom he receives them (o). On the other hand, knowledge merely of the fact that the person proposing to deal with the securities is a broker (p), or that the persons so proposing are joint owners thereof (q), is not sufficient to raise an imputation of notice of an infirmity in the title.

company.

482. Equitable titles to shares in companies registered under the Companies Acts (r) rank in order of date (s).

The principle of equity that a notice of charge given by a second equitable mortgagee enables him to take precedence over a first equitable mortgagee (t) is inapplicable to the case of shares in a registered company, and a holder of an equitable title to such shares can get no advantage over holders of prior equities by giving notice to the company (u).

Such a notice is not, however, inoperative for all purposes, and the receipt of notice by a company of a charge upon some of its shares will prevent the company from availing itself as against those shares of any lien under its articles of association for a debt to the company incurred subsequently to its receipt of the notice (v).

the lender the certificate relating to the same accompanied by a transfer specifying the securities and executed by the registered holder, but in blank as to the date and the name of the transferee. Such a transaction constitutes an equitable mortgage (a).

SECT. 5.
Security.

484. If the registered holder of securities gives a blank form of transfer, together with the certificates for the shares, to a creditor by way of security, he thereby confers upon him authority to complete his security by filling up the transfer and obtaining registration (b). Authority conferred by blank transfer.

A registered holder of shares who gives a blank transfer also comes under an implied obligation to do nothing to impede or prevent the registration of anyone whose name is properly inserted in the blank transfer as transferee, and is liable to an action for damages at the suit of the transferee if he acts in breach of this obligation (c).

In the case of transfers indorsed upon the certificates of American companies which, when signed in blank by the registered holder, customarily pass from hand to hand by delivery, each prior holder confers upon the bond fide holder for the time being an authority to fill in the name of the transferee, and is estopped to this extent, and to this extent only, from denying the title of the holder (d). American securities.

485. Where the constitution of the company requires transfers to be by deed, a transfer executed in blank and not redelivered by the transferor after completion is ineffectual to pass the legal estate (e), even though it has been acted on by the company and the transferee registered in the company's books (f). Transfers by deed.

Redelivery by an agent of the transferor is not effectual unless the agent be authorised by deed (g).

Deposit by agent.

486. Where a registered owner has given a blank transfer and a certificate to another and has authorised him to deal with the shares as his agent, the case falls within the principles governing the cases of authority given by a principal to an agent (i). The owner, therefore, comes under a duty to those persons whom he intends to act upon such authority to give them notice of any limit that he places on the apparent authority of the agent, and, in the absence of notice of any limitation, is bound by any disposition of the property made by the agent within the limits of his apparent authority (j).

Forgery.

If, however, the person to whom a blank transfer is given fraudulently fills in, as the property to be transferred, shares which the signatory of the blank transfer has not authorised him to deal with at all, the document is a forgery and passes no title to a purchaser (k).

SUB-SECT. 5.—Broker's Lien.

General lien.

487. A broker has a general lien upon all securities of his client which are in his possession, including securities deposited to secure a specific loan, unless the securities are deposited in pursuance of a special contract which is inconsistent with the general lien (l).

The fact that the securities in the broker's hands are the property of persons other than the client who deposited them does not prevent the broker's lien attaching to them provided that the broker did not know that they did not belong to his client and was not put upon inquiry as to his client's title by the circumstances of the case (m).

489. Time is of the essence of a contract for the purchase and sale of stocks and shares, and, if completion does not take place within the proper time, the purchaser may refuse to accept (o). The same principle applies where the time originally fixed has been altered by agreement, the extended time being substituted for the original time (p). Similarly, in the case of a contract to be completed on the coming out (q) of certificates in a new company, if the coming out is unreasonably delayed, the purchaser may rescind the contract (r). SECT. 6.

Essence of the contract.

490. In the case of a contract for special settlement, there is no implied term that the special settlement shall take place within a reasonable time, and the contract must be performed whenever a special settlement takes place (s). Special

The fact that a special settlement has been obtained by fraud does not affect bargains between persons not parties to the fraud, even though persons interested in obtaining the special settlement were members of the committee who granted it (t).

491. Where it has been agreed between a seller and purchaser of shares that the seller shall carry over the shares from account to account for an indefinite time, and the seller dies during the currency of that arrangement, the time for completion of the contract of purchase and sale is on the account day next following the death of the seller (u). Completion.

In the case of an ordinary sale to a jobber, if the name passed is accepted without objection (e), and the seller executes a transfer of the securities and receives payment of the price thereof, he cannot afterwards object to the transferee on the score of his pecuniary responsibility, and the jobber is released from liability though the transferee does not get registered (f), and though the name be that of a man of straw who is unable to indemnify the seller in respect of calls on the shares (g). On the other hand, where the name passed is that of a person who has not agreed to become the purchaser of the shares (h), or that of a foreigner resident abroad (i), or that of a person incapable of contracting (j), the jobber remains liable.

Registration
guaranteed.

493. Where there is superadded to the ordinary contract an express provision that registration is guaranteed (k), the jobber is not released from his liability until he procures some purchaser to become the registered holder, though he may have passed the name of a person who is liable to him as purchaser (l). The jobber in such a case is entitled to an indemnity over against the purchaser from himself, since, by his default in obtaining registration, such purchaser has rendered the jobber liable to his own seller (m).

Waiver of inquiry.

494. There is no obligation upon the seller to inquire into the capacity and willingness to contract of the person whose name is passed to him as purchaser, and the seller, if content to waive inquiry as to his responsibility, is entitled to assume the capacity of the purchaser, and that he has authorised his broker to contract for him (n).

A broker who issues a ticket professes to be the agent of the person who is named on the ticket as purchaser, and represents that he has authority to bind him, that such purchaser is a person capable of accepting the shares, and that he, the broker, has authority to accept the transfer on his account so as to bind him. If any of these representations is untrue, the broker, whether he has acted fraudulently or not, is liable to make good the representation to any person to whom the ticket passes in the ordinary course of business, if such person alters his position and incurs any pecuniary loss from trusting in the truth of the representation (o). Liability of broker.

496. Where a purchasing client has instructed his broker to pass a name which is not that of a person able and willing to contract, and the broker has, in consequence, come under a liability to indemnify the seller, the broker is entitled to an indemnity over against his client (p). Indemnity to broker.

497. A person who has instructed a broker to buy and then instructs him, instead of passing his own name as transferee, to pass the name of a third person able and willing to contract, ceases to be liable when the seller accepts the name of the third person and transfers to him (q). Where, however, the name passed is that of a mere nominee of the real purchaser, the real purchaser can be compelled to indemnify the seller (r). Substituted transferee.

This is in accordance with the practice of the Stock Exchange, under which a broker who passes the name of a person incapable of contracting, or who has not authorised the broker to purchase for him, is compelled to indemnify any member who suffers loss through the passing of such a ticket: see the evidence given in Merry v. Nickalls, supra; Peppercorne v. Clench (1872), 26 L. T. 656. The same is the case where one broker acts for both buyer and seller (Queensland Investment and Land Co., Ltd. v. Lowe, supra, without overruling it, on the ground that the principal of a broker who issues a ticket impliedly contracts with the seller that he will keep him indemnified against all liability in respect of the shares sold, and that it is only the intermediate parties between the issuer of the ticket and the seller who are released; see the comments on this in Merry v. Nickalls (1872), 7 Ch. App. 733, 750, 757, 758. It is submitted that there is no ground for implying such a contract as BLACKBURN, J., suggests in the case of the issuer of the ticket any more than in the case of the intermediate parties who pass it on.

L. 328); see title COMPANIES, Vol. V., p. 150. In deciding whether a transferee is a nominee or not the relative positions of the parties and the amount of the consideration paid are elements to be taken into consideration (Re Mexican and South American Co., Hyam's Case (1859), 1 De G. Position of seller.

498. When a name is passed by the purchaser and accepted by the seller and the seller has executed transfers and received the price, a novation takes place by which privity of contract is established between the transferor and the person whose name is passed, whether the latter has executed the transfer (s) or not (t). The person who has allowed his name to be passed and has accepted transfers from the seller is liable to indemnify the seller against all liability in respect to the shares (a). The seller is also entitled as against him to a decree for specific performance (b).

The time for delivery does not depend upon circumstances which were not known to the purchaser at the time of making the contract, and, consequently, the seller is responsible for a delay in delivery occasioned by circumstances over which the seller has no control, but which were not disclosed by him to the purchaser (e). SECT. 6.

500. It being a well-known practice of the London Stock Exchange that shares to make up any particular quantity sold may be obtained from more than one ultimate seller (f), a purchaser is not entitled to refuse delivery of a part of the shares purchased by him (g). Part delivery.

501. Where a call has been made upon shares which are deliverable before the call becomes payable, the deliverer may himself pay the call and claim the amount thereof from the issuer of the ticket (h). Calls.

SUB-SECT. 4.—Payment.

502. Differences on carrying over transactions are payable upon pay day of the account (i), as are the differences arising on the passing of tickets (k). Hammer price differences (l) arising upon a default are payable on the day for which the contracts are entered into (m). Differences.

503. The price of registered securities is payable against delivery of the certificate and transfer (n). Price.

504. It is customary for a broker to deliver securities against the crossed cheque of another member of the London Stock Exchange, and it is no evidence of negligence on his part that he has done so without first inquiring whether the other member has assets sufficient to meet the cheque (o). Payment to agent. 506. No authority, implied or ostensible, to receive payment is conferred upon an agent acting for a disclosed principal by the fact alone that he has been instructed to sell (q). Where, however, a stockbroker is entrusted with transfers containing receipts for the purchase-money, he has an implied authority to receive payment (r).

Mode of payment. 507. Payment to an agent, to constitute a discharge against the principal, must be made in money, payment by cheque duly cashed being equivalent to payment in cash (s); it cannot be made by setting off a debt due from the agent (t), or by a bill which cannot be allocated to the specific transaction (a). If, however, the agent is authorised to keep part of the purchase-money, that part need not be paid in cash, but may be set off or otherwise dealt with (b).

Completion.

The transfer, in the case of a purchase on a Stock Exchange, contains the price payable by the ultimate purchaser (g). Where the transaction has passed through intermediate purchasers, this price may differ from that to be received by the transferor, and a note to this effect is to be found upon most forms of transfer used by stock-brokers. Where this form of transfer is used, the transferor is bound by custom to execute the transfer notwithstanding the difference in price (h). Price to be inserted.

Transfers of stock (i), shares, marketable securities (k), and foreign or colonial stock certificates must be stamped ad valorem as conveyances on sale (l). Stamp.

510. In the case of inscribed stock the transfer is effected by the holder or his attorney (m) attending at the Bank of England (n) and there signing a transfer. Inscribed stock.

If the Bank acts upon a forged power of attorney, or is otherwise induced to permit an unauthorised transfer of stock, the Bank must make good the loss to the true owner of the stock, provided that it is not through his negligence that the fraud has succeeded (o). Unauthorised transfer.

Foreign securities. 511. Whether the documents of title to bearer representing foreign government loans will be treated by the courts of this country as negotiable instruments depends upon the custom of English merchants and the law of England (s).

The rights of shareholders of a foreign corporation, as well as the effect of its stock certificates, are governed by the law of the country of domicile of the corporation (t). Indian and colonial loans are governed by the Acts of the legislatures which created them (u).

American companies. In the case of most American companies the shares are transferable in the books of the company. In order, however, to make them transferable by delivery, certificates are issued indorsed with blank transfers, and with powers of attorney also in blank as to the name of the attorney. These, when the power of attorney is signed by the registered holder, pass from hand to hand by delivery (a).

English companies. 512. The shares and stock of a company to which the Companies Acts (b) apply are transferable as provided by the regulations of the company (c). These regulations may provide for the issue of share warrants to bearer for fully-paid stock or shares (d).

Purchaser's rights. 515. Upon a sale of securities where nothing is said to the contrary all dividends, even though for a period anterior to the sale (n), and rights (o) attaching to the shares pass to the purchaser. On the London Stock Exchange, however, in the absence of a special bargain, sales are made "cum dividend" or "ex dividend" (p), "cum rights" or "ex rights" (q), according to the official list quotation.

Where a seller of shares, to which rights are attached, himself obtains the rights, he must account for them to the purchaser, although the latter had notice of the rights and has allowed the time to elapse without exercising them, provided that there has been nothing amounting to a definite renunciation on his part (r).

Prospective dividends.

516. Bargains in prospective dividends, although not enforceable in the domestic forum of the London Stock Exchange, may be enforced in the courts by non-members (s).

SUB-SECT. 8.—Registration.

Obligations of the parties.

517. A seller of shares does not guarantee that the purchaser will be able to get himself upon the register, the seller's only duty being to tender a duly executed and valid transfer and a certificate, and so to do all that is necessary to enable the transferee to insist with the company on his right to be registered as a member in respect of such shares (t).

The seller is, moreover, under an implied obligation to do nothing to prevent the purchaser getting himself registered, and is liable to an action for damages for a breach of this obligation (u). SECT. 6.
Completion.

In transactions subject to the rules and regulations of the London Stock Exchange the duty of obtaining registration is, by custom, placed upon the purchaser (x). In transactions done off the Stock Exchange the result is still the same (a). If, however, a bargain is made with special reference to the articles of association of the company whose securities are being dealt in, and those articles place upon the seller the obligation of obtaining registration, the general rule does not apply (b).

518. Although the duty of obtaining registration is cast upon the purchaser, the seller is not entitled to rescission of the contract on the ground that the directors have refused to register the purchaser, but must rely upon his right to be indemnified by the purchaser against his liability to future calls (c). broker.

are to be assessed the client must be allowed what is a reasonable time in the circumstances within which to reopen the closed account (g). It is his duty to minimise his damages, and he is not allowed to inflame them by standing by and doing nothing (h), or by waiting to see whether the securities will appreciate in value (i).

520. A broker who has wrongfully closed his client's account is, where the closing is not accepted by the client, entitled to no indemnity for any loss arising upon the closing (k). The same result follows where the closing is not due to the voluntary act of the broker but to his being declared a defaulter on the Stock Exchange (l), unless his default is solely attributable to bargains entered into for a particular client, in which case he is entitled to an indemnity against that client notwithstanding the closing (m).

The fact, however, that a broker wrongfully closes his client's account does not deprive him of his right to recover against his client sums due in respect of previous transactions properly carried out (n).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Breach by Client.

Failure to provide funds.

521. In the absence of any agreement by the broker not to require payment of differences by account day (o), the client must put his broker in funds in time to enable him to carry out the obligations undertaken by him for his client (p).

If the client fails to provide his broker with funds to pay differences which are not covered by collateral security appropriated to the liquidation thereof, the broker is permitted by the custom of the London Stock Exchange, provided that the client has had notice of the amount due from him, to close his client's account by selling what the client has bought and buying what the client has sold notwithstanding that the shares have already been carried over by him to the next account (q).

2 T. L. R. 872, the damages awarded were based on the difference between the price at which the account was closed and the price at the date of writ; but the action was brought shortly after discovery of the wrongful closing, and there was no evidence of any fluctuation in price between the discovery and the date of the writ.

522. Where the dealings are on the terms that cover is deposited and that the account may be closed as soon as it shows at the then market prices a loss equal to the cover, the broker has an option to close when the loss has reached the amount of the cover. But if, before he exercises that option, the prices of the securities rise, so that the loss again becomes smaller than the amount of the cover, his right to close ceases, and he may not close the account unless and until the loss again exhausts the cover (r). SECT. 1.
Breach
between Broker and

Exhaustion of cover

523. A broker may, by custom, close his client's account forthwith upon either the death or the insolvency of his client (s). By insolvency is meant the client's inability to pay his debts in the ordinary commercial sense and in the ordinary way of business (t). Death or insolvency.

524. Where a broker is entitled to close his client's account it is not necessary that he should do so through the official broker of the Stock Exchange; he may do so by purchase or sale in the open market (a), or by passing the securities through a jobber's books at the proper market price (b). If an immediate sale on the market would be detrimental to the client, he may keep them himself, giving the client credit for the proper price (c). If, however, in closing the account, the broker sells the shares, and by the same transaction reacquires them on his own account at less than he could have got them for in open market, he must give his client credit for the profit so made (d). SECT. 1.

Breach
between Broker and Client.Option of injured party.SUB-SECT. 3.—Anticipatory Breach.

526. The general rules applicable to anticipatory breach of contract (f) are applicable also in the case of a contract relating to stocks and shares. An anticipatory breach of the contract which goes to the whole consideration gives to the other party to the contract an option either to treat the repudiation of the contract as a definitive breach of it, and, thereupon, to treat the contract as rescinded except for the purpose of his bringing an action for the breach of it, or to refuse to treat the contract as rescinded and hold the party repudiating the contract to his obligation when the time fixed for performance arrives (g).

Thus, where a client commits an anticipatory breach of his contract with his broker, the broker may refuse to accept his repudiation, in which case he is entitled to an indemnity when the time for performance arrives, and he may, without waiting, bring an action for a declaration that he is so entitled (h). If he elects to accept the repudiation as putting an end to the contract he may sue at once for damages or an indemnity, and he can either close the account at once (i), and so fix the amount of his claim, or he may keep the bargain for himself and claim from the client as damages the difference between the contract price of the securities and the market price at or within a reasonable time from the date of the acceptance of the repudiation as a final breach (j).

Where the anticipatory breach is not accepted, the damages are not to be measured by the prices at the date of breach (k).

Date of breach.

527. The date of the acceptance of a repudiation of the contract is a question of fact. Where there have been several refusals to accept or deliver and negotiations have taken place, it is a question for the jury when the breach finally took place (l).

The bringing of an action before the arrival of the date fixed for completion of the contract constitutes an election to treat the repudiation of the contract as a final breach (m).

SECT. 2.—*Breach between Purchaser and Seller.*SUB-SECT. 1.—In General.

529. The fact that a call has been made between the date of the contract and the time for completion (o), or even before the contract was made (p), affords no defence to an action by the seller for non-completion.

Calls.

Similarly, the fact that the company has been wound up before account day (q) or has been ordered to be wound up at the date of the contract (r) affords no answer to the seller's claim for the purchase-money and for an indemnity, notwithstanding the fact that by statute all transfers without the consent of the liquidator are void (s) and the liquidator refuses his consent to the transfer. If, therefore, the seller of shares on a Stock Exchange is made a contributory in the winding up either as a present or a past member of the company, the purchaser from him will be ordered to indemnify him (t). If, however, the contract is made by both parties in ignorance that winding-up proceedings have already been commenced, the contract is not valid or enforceable so as to make the purchaser a contributory (u).

court cannot compel it(c), the court, in lieu of a decree for specific performance, will order the purchaser to indemnify the seller.

SUB-SECT. 3.—Specific Performance.

531. Specific performance will not as a rule be granted of a contract for the transfer of stock in the public funds(d). Where, however, a purchaser for some reason has no remedy at law, as, for instance, where he is an equitable assignee of a contract for the purchase of stock, specific performance may, perhaps, be granted(e).

532. Shares in companies have been held to stand upon a different footing on the grounds that they are limited in number and not always available on the market(f). If, however, there is a free market in the shares in question, specific performance of a contract to purchase shares will not be granted, because damages are an adequate remedy(g).

533. Specific performance will not be granted to a seller where, on inquiry as to title, he is found to have precluded himself from making a good title(h). The fact that he has only an equitable title to the shares which are registered in the name of a third person is no objection to a decree of specific performance(i).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Damages.

534. The most ordinary remedy for breach of a contract to purchase or sell securities is an action for damages. The measure of damages is the difference between the contract price and the price of the securities at such time after the breach as the court may hold to be reasonable to allow for the making of a new contract to replace the old one(j).

SUB-SECT. 5.—Warranty of Title and Genuineness of Securities.

Breach between

Genuineness of securities.

536. In the case of all Stock Exchange bargains the seller warrants the genuineness and regularity of the documents delivered by him (m). If, therefore, the documents are not genuine and the purchaser is, in consequence, unable to obtain registration or, having got himself registered, is removed from the register as the result of a legal decision, the committee will, as between the members who have participated in the transaction, compel each seller to make good delivery to his purchaser and so ultimately cast the loss upon that member who first sold the spurious securities; and he, if he has acted for a client, may recover in an action against his client for an indemnity (n).

537. A purchaser, who is unable to get registration owing to his vendor having no title to the shares which he purported to sell, may recover the money paid for the shares as on a total failure of consideration (o). Remedy.

SECT. 3.—Wrongful Detention of Securities.

538. Where securities are wrongfully detained the person entitled to them may obtain an order for the return of the securities or their value at the date of trial, together with damages for their detention (p). Remedies.

539. The assessment of damages for wrongful detention is for the jury, who may take into consideration any fluctuation in the price of the securities between the proper day for delivery and the actual date thereof (q). The plaintiff is not entitled, as of course, to have his damages measured by the highest price between the first wrongful detention and the delivery or the trial (r). If, however, he can show that he would have sold the securities at any Measure of damages.

Where the time for replacement of securities is extended by agreement, the damages for failure to replace them are calculated with reference to the extended and not to the original date (t).

Part V.—Default.

SECT. 1.—Default of Broker.

Position of client.

540. On the default of a broker, his bargains as between himself and the jobber are closed at hammer price (a). This closing does not affect the position of the broker's client; the client's bargains made through the broker with the jobber remain open (b), and must, in the absence of agreement to the contrary, be completed by the client with the jobber.

The client cannot compel the jobber to treat the bargains as closed at the hammer price (c), though the jobber may agree to do so if the client desires it (d); nor can the client compel the jobber to agree to the substitution of a third person as the party liable to him in place of the client (e).

Ch.; Hartas v. Ribbons (1889), 22 Q. B. D. 254, C. A.; Anderson & Co. v. Beard, [1900] 2 Q. defaulting broker in the hands of the official assignee affords no defence to the client in an action by the jobber for non-completion, and the jobber is entitled, nevertheless, to recover damages from the client if the latter fails to complete (f).

SECT. 1.
Default of Broker.

541. A broker is not entitled to an indemnity from his client against losses arising from the closing of the broker's bargains under the hammer (g), unless the client, having been given the option, has elected to treat his bargain as closed by the hammer (h), or unless the client is himself in default to the broker so that the broker might properly have closed the account (i).

Rights of

SECT. 2.—Default of Jobber.

542. Where a jobber defaults, his bargains with other members are closed at hammer price (j); but bargains which he has made through a broker with a client are unaffected. The client whose jobber defaults has, apart from some special arrangement, no remedy against the broker in respect of the default of the jobber (k).

Effect of jobber's default.

SECT. 3.—Liquidation of Defaulter's Estate.

543. Upon the default of a member of the Stock Exchange all his assets, by the operation of the rules as to default, vest in the official assignee (l), whose duty it is to collect the assets (m), and who may maintain an action in his own name in respect thereof (n). The official assignee may also sue in the name of the defaulter; and, whether he sues in his own name or in that of the defaulter, he recovers in his own right, and the amount recovered by him cannot be attached by a judgment creditor of the defaulter (o).

Cessio bonorum.

Where the official assignee sues in the name of the defaulter the latter cannot be compelled to give security for costs as nominal plaintiff (p).

(f) Stoneham v. Wyman (1901), 6 Com. Cas. 174. The jobber is not, in effect, allowed to receive damages twice over, for he is obliged under the rules of the London Stock Exchange to account for any excess to the official assignee as representing the estate of the defaulting broker. SECT. 3. The result of the cessio bonorum provided for by the rules is to constitute default on the London Stock Exchange an act of bankruptcy (q).

Liquidation
of Defaulter's Estate.

Differences.

544. The differences which arise by reason of the closing at hammer price (r), or which become due to the defaulter on passing tickets (s), form an artificial fund which may be retained by the official assignee as against the trustee in bankruptcy of a defaulter. But if bankruptcy supervenes within three months of the default the trustee may recover from the official assignee all other assets which come into his hands as representing the defaulter (t).

Effect of liquidation.

545. The liquidation of a defaulter's estate by the official assignee does not amount to an accord and satisfaction of the defaulter's debts or bar his creditors from suing him at law for the balance of their claims after deducting the amount received by them in the liquidation (a).

Part VI.—Illegality and Fraud.

SECT. 1.—Gaming and Wagering in Securities.

SUB-SECT. 1.—In General.

applicable.

546. With the exception of Leeman's Act (b), there is no statute in force which applies peculiarly to gaming and wagering contracts in stocks and shares. The general principles, therefore, which apply to such contracts are the same as are applicable to gaming and wagering contracts generally (c).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Gaming Distinguished from Speculation.

Distinction.

547. A contract for the purchase or sale of securities which is entered into in such circumstances as to give a right to the purchaser to call upon the seller to make delivery, and to the seller to call upon the purchaser to take delivery, is a legitimate commercial transaction notwithstanding that the parties when they enter into it do so with the intention of reselling or repurchasing the securities and so realising a profit from a fluctuation in the price (d). If, however, it appears that though the contract in form provides for a purchase and sale, it is not intended that there should be an actual purchaser and seller, but simply a bargain that, according to the price of the securities on a future day, the parties should either gain or lose, the contract is a gaming and wagering contract (e).

(a) Mendelssohn v. Katcliff, [1904] A. C. 456. A creditor who has obtained judgment in such an action can maintain a petition in bankruptcy against the defaulter (ibid.; Re Ward, Ex parte Ward (1882), 22 Ch. D. 132, C. A.); see title BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY, Vol. II., p. 40, note (b).

SECT. 1.
Gaming and Wagering in Securities.

It is of the essence of gaming and wagering that the one party is to win and the other lose upon a future event which, at the time of the contract, is of an uncertain nature (f).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Stock Exchange Transactions.

548. Transactions upon the London Stock Exchange are governed by the rules of that Stock Exchange and, under those rules, all bargains must be completed in the prescribed manner, and necessarily involve an obligation upon the parties to take or to make delivery, or to pass the name of someone who will do so. This obligation attaches as soon as the bargain is made, and the parties can only get rid of it by subsequently entering into a converse bargain with each other (g). It follows that, although it is possible to gamble or speculate on the London Stock Exchange, it is almost impossible to make a contract there which is void as a gaming and wagering contract (h).

Effect of Stock Exchange
rules.

As far as the public are concerned, who deal through a broker on the London Stock Exchange, the Gaming Acts (i), apart from some very special agreement between the parties, can have no application. In the first place, the broker himself does not wager at all, the client's gain or loss involving no loss or gain to him, and, in the second place, the broker must make a contract with a jobber which, under the rules of the London Stock Exchange, will involve an obligation upon the client to accept or deliver as the case may be (j).

549. If a broker or a non-member (k) were to make a special bargain with a jobber that, notwithstanding the rules of the London Stock Exchange, neither party should be compellable to take or deliver,

(g) Re Morgan, Ex parte Phillips, Ex parte Marnham (1860), 2 De G. F. & J. 634, C. A. It would no doubt be possible for members of the London Stock Exchange to agree to bet on prices instead of dealing according to the rules, but such a case has not arisen.

SECT. 1. the bargain would be void under the Gaming Act, 1845 (l), and in the case of a broker, the agreement to indemnify or remunerate the broker would be void under the Gaming Act, 1892 (m).
Gaming and Wagering in Securities.

Options. 550. The same principles apply to options. Those made in the ordinary course upon the London Stock Exchange are legitimate dealings; but if it were found that there was a tacit understanding that the bargains should not be enforced and that differences only should be payable the contract would be void (n).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Outside Dealers or Brokers.

Gaming contracts.

551. Though a broker who is not a member of any Stock Exchange may carry on a legitimate business, the term “outside dealer” (o) or “outside broker” (p) is, in common parlance, used to denote a person who carries on a gambling business (q). Many attempts have been made by outside dealers to frame contracts which would enable them to make bets with their customers on the price of securities and yet sue in a court of law for their winnings. For a time this was successfully accomplished by contracts purporting to be ordinary contracts of purchase and sale (r). It is now settled, however, that if, notwithstanding the ostensible terms of the contract, there is a secret understanding that differences only shall be payable, the form of contract is immaterial (s).

Test of gaming contracts.

552. Amongst the elements which have been considered to afford evidence of such a tacit understanding are the financial position of the speculator in relation to the magnitude of the dealings (t); the fact that no securities have at any time been taken up (u); the fact that the contract contains a stipulation that something additional must be done if delivery is to be made (w), or that a guarantee shall

SECT. 1.
Gaming and Wagering in Securities.

SUB-SECT. 5.—Cover Deposited for Gaming Accounts.

553. Moneys or securities deposited as security in gaming transactions are deposited as security for the payment of a debt which may become due on the happening of an uncertain event, but which if it becomes due will not be recoverable at law, and are not within the meaning of the words "money or any valuable thing deposited to abide the event of a wager" (c) in the Gaming Act, 1845 (d).

Not subject to Gaming Act, 1847.

The rights of a person who has deposited security in respect of a gaming transaction depend, therefore, upon the common law (e).

554. Anyone engaged in gaming can withdraw at any time by giving notice of his intention to do so (f); and commencing an action to get back a deposit is a sufficient notice of withdrawal (g). Right to withdraw.

Upon notice of withdrawal the gambler is entitled to recover his deposit unless it has been actually appropriated to meet a loss which has already occurred (h). Hence, if the gambler is a winner (i), or if the event on which the wager depends has not yet happened (k), he can recover his deposit; so also if he is a loser, but the loss is less than the deposit, he can recover the balance (l). SUB-SECT. 6.—Purchase Out of Gaming Winnings.

Not enforceable. 555. A contract for the purchase of securities, made upon the terms that they are to be paid for by the purchaser out of winnings on gaming transactions which have taken place between himself and the seller, cannot be enforced, and no action will lie for damages for non-delivery of the securities (o).

SECT. 2.—Leeman's Act.

Applicable to bank shares.

556. All contracts for sale or transfer of any shares, or stock, or other interest in any joint-stock banking company in the United Kingdom, other than the Banks of England and Ireland, are by statute bound to comply with certain requirements (p). The contract (q) must set forth in writing the numbers of the shares or stock on the register of the company, or, if they are not registered by distinguishing numbers, must set forth the names of the persons in whose names the shares or stock then stand in the books of the company (r); to insert in such a contract a false entry of names or numbers is a misdemeanour (s).

It is the custom of the London Stock Exchange to disregard this statute in dealings between members; this custom, however, is an unreasonable custom, and does not bind non-members who have no knowledge of it (t).

Position of broker.

557. A broker who makes a contract which is unenforceable by reason of this statute is guilty of negligence (a), but if his client, after discovering that the statute has not been complied with,

City of Glasgow Bank* (1878), 6 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 420; affirmed on other grounds (1879), 4 App. Cas. 624, where Lord CAIRNS, L.C., at p. 630, expressly stated that he was not satisfied that the decision of the Scottish courts on this point was erroneous).

SECT. 2.

Act.

SECT. 3.—Rigging the Market.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Criminal Aspect.

558. A conspiracy to give a fictitious price to securities by means of false rumours (c); by obtaining a quotation in the official list from the Committee of the London Stock Exchange by false statements (d); or by making sham purchases of shares in the market at a premium (e) is a criminal conspiracy. Conspiracy.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Civil Aspect.

559. All persons engaged in rigging the market by such false representations may be made liable in an action for damages for deceit by any purchaser who can show that the representations were made for the purpose of inducing him to buy (f). Where the false representation was not made to the plaintiff directly, but he has acted upon a representation made to a third person, he must show that the false representation was made with the intent that he should act upon it in the manner which occasioned his loss (g). In the case of false representations made to the public, with the intention of inducing persons to purchase in the market, the makers of the false representations are liable to anyone so acting upon them (h). But the purchaser must have acted upon the representation, for if he was not induced thereby but acted upon his own judgment no action will lie (i). Deceit.

Suits between conspirators to rig the market will not be entertained by the court (k).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Legitimate Market Making.

560. A market may be made legitimately provided that no fraud or false representation is used. Shares may be pooled and a broker or Pooling of Part I.—Regulation of Traffic.

SECT. 1.—Introductory.

Common law
rule.

562. Apart from some statute or statutory regulation (a) confining certain classes of traffic to certain parts of the highway (b), directing

(a) [It may be pointed out that the introduction of mechanically-driven vehicles has rendered the legislation regulating street traffic to some extent inapplicable, since some of the statutes either in express terms or by necessary implication are limited to vehicles drawn by animal power; see, for instance, Highway Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), s. 77; Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 77), s. 26; see pp. 271, 272, post.—EDS.]

(b) As to the meaning of regulations requiring traffic to keep "on the near side" of a road, see Bolton v. Everett (1911), 75 J. P. 534.

observance of the rule of the road, or otherwise restricting common law rights, a person is entitled to use any highway which has been dedicated for such traffic as he desires to conduct on it, and to use any part thereof, although his failure to observe the rule of the road may be evidence of negligence on his part, should an accident occur (c).

SECT. 1.
Introductory.

SECT. 2.—Diversion and General Regulation of Traffic.

563. An urban authority, or a rural authority possessing the necessary urban powers (d), may from time to time make orders for the route to be observed by carts, carriages, horses, and persons, and for preventing obstruction of the streets within its district at times of public processions, rejoicings, or illuminations, or when streets are crowded and liable to be obstructed (e); it may also give directions to the police for keeping order and preventing obstruction in the neighbourhood of theatres and other places of public resort (f). The Commissioner of Metropolitan Police and the Commissioner of City Police have practically identical powers in the Metropolitan Police District and the City of London (g).

Urban districts and the Metropolis.

564. Upon application by the minister or wardens of any place of public worship within the district, an urban authority, or a rural authority possessing the necessary urban powers (h), may make orders regulating the route by which, or the manner in which,

Sunday traffic.

(c) See titles HIGHWAYS, STREETS, AND BRIDGES, Vol. XVI., pp. 49 et seq.; NEGLIGENCE, Vol. XXI., pp. 412 et seq. As to the jus spatiandi, see title OPEN SPACES AND RECREATION GROUNDS, Vol. XXI., pp. 579, 580. As to rule of the road, see title NEGLIGENCE, Vol. XXI., pp. 412, 413; and pp. 276, 277, post.

(d) The Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 171, applies the Town Police Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 89), ss. 21—23, to urban districts. The provisions may be put in force in a rural district or part thereof by order of the Local Government Board under the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 276; see title LOCAL GOVERNMENT, Vol. XIX., p. 332. A provision against "driving or conducting cattle" by a certain route is not infringed by carrying calves in a cart (Triggs v. Lester (1866), L. R. 1 Q. B. 259 (local Act)).

(e) As to the diversion of traffic by barriers or hoardings when a street is being repaired or broken open, see title HIGHWAYS, STREETS, AND BRIDGES, Vol. XVI., pp. 198 et seq.

(f) Town Police Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 89), ss. 21, 23; the penalty for wilful breach of any order is a sum not exceeding 40s. (ibid., s. 21). For a conviction for disregarding a constable's direction to stop, see Dudderidge v. Rawlings (1912), 77 J. P. 167. As to theatre queues, see Lyons, Son & Co. v. Gulliver (1913), 29 T. L. R. 428; and title THEATRES AND OTHER PLACES OF ENTERTAINMENT, p. 408, post. persons may drive carts, carriages, and cattle near such places during service hours on Sundays and certain other days (i).

The Commissioner of Metropolitan Police has similar powers within the Metropolitan Police District (j).

565. Police regulations may be made as to certain streets within six miles from Charing Cross, but outside the City of London, with respect to the line to be kept by persons riding or driving, and to the route to be taken by vehicles, and such regulations may prohibit any vehicle from entering a street for the purpose only of passing to its destination in some other street. No such regulation, however, may limit the number of metropolitan stage carriages that may pass down any street in pursuance of their ordinary trade (k). Police notices as to traffic generally, and as to hackney and stage carriages, may in the Metropolis be affixed to lamp-posts (l).

Within the City of London the Common Council has similar but rather more extensive powers of making regulations (m).

566. In places where the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907, s. 88 (n), is in force, the officer in charge of the police at any fire has power to stop and regulate the traffic in any street if he considers it necessary or desirable to do so for the purpose of extinguishing the fire or for the protection of life or property (o).

567. In places where the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907, s. 78 (p), is in force, the local authority, whether urban or rural, may from time to time make regulations (q), to be approved by the Home Secretary, with respect to particular streets specially liable to be obstructed owing to the amount and nature of the traffic, prescribing the line to be kept at any street crossing by riders and (o) Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 53), s. 88. The penalty for wilful disobedience to the officer's order is a sum not exceeding £5 (ibid.). As to the powers of the police and firemen at fires in the Metropolis, see title METROPOLIS, Vol. XX., pp. 417, 418.

(q) The penalty for breach of any regulation after warning by word or signal from a constable directing the traffic is a sum not exceeding 40s. (Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 53), s. 78). No offence is committed until after a warning (Chorlton v. Liggell (1910), 74 J. P. 458).

drivers, and requiring heavy and slow vehicles to keep to a particular portion of the street (r).

SECT. 3.—Restrictions as to Traffic.

568. No cart, wagon, or similar (s) vehicle may be used on a highway unless the owner's name and address is painted in the prescribed manner on the off side (t).

569. No one person may drive more than two carts, wagons, or other such carriages on any highway; he may only drive two if each is drawn by a single horse, and if the horse of the hinder one is fastened to the foremost one by a rein not exceeding 4 feet in length (u).

570. In places where the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907, s. 80 (w), is in force, the local authority may by order (x) prescribe the streets in which, and the manner according to which, the leading or driving (y) of animals shall be permitted within the district. Such an order may operate only between 9 a.m. and 9 p.m., and is not to prevent animals being driven to or from their owner's premises, or to any licensed slaughter-house. A reasonably short route is to be allowed at all times for cattle passing direct between a market and a station, or wharf, or place outside the district.

571. Within six miles from Charing Cross, London, no person may drive or conduct any cattle (a) through any street (b) between certain hours (c), except with the permission of the Commissioner of Metropolitan or City Police, as the case may be (d).

(x) No summary penalty is provided for breach of such an order.

(y) As to the meaning of the phrase "driving or conducting" cattle, see note (d), p. 269, ante.

(a) "Cattle" is defined as including bull, ox, cow, heifer, calf, sheep, goats, and swine, also horses, mules, and asses, when led in a string or loose (Metropolitan Streets Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 134), s. 3).

(b) "Street" is defined as including "any highway or public place, whether a thoroughfare or not"; the royal parks, gardens, and possessions managed by the Commissioners of Public Works are for the purposes of the Act to be deemed public places (ibid.).

(c) The prohibited period is in the City between 8 a.m. and 8 p.m. (City of London (Street Traffic) Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. lxxvii.), s. 2), and outside the City between 10 a.m. and 7 p.m. (Metropolitan Streets Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 134), s. 7).

In certain streets within six miles from Charing Cross no person may between 10 a.m. and 7 p.m., except with the permission of the Commissioner of Metropolitan or City Police, as the case may be, or except in cases of emergency, drive or conduct any vehicle laden with any article exceeding 85 feet in length, or protruding more than 8½ feet behind the vehicle or more than 1 foot from the sides thereof; or carry any ladder, pole, or other article exceeding 85 feet in length or 8½ feet in breadth; or drive or conduct any vehicle used for conveying goods and drawn by more than four horses(e).

573. A county council (f) may make bye-laws as to any highway in the county (1) for prohibiting or regulating the use of any wagon, wain, cart, or carriage drawn by animal power and having wheels of which the felloes or tires are not of such width in proportion to the weight carried by, or to the size of, or to the number of wheels of such wagon, wain, cart, or carriage, as may be specified in such bye-laws; (2) for prohibiting or regulating the use of any wagon, cart, or other carriage drawn by animal power not having the nails on its wheels countersunk in such manner as may be specified in such bye-laws, or having on its wheels bars or other projections forbidden by such bye-laws; (3) for prohibiting or regulating the locking of any wheel of any waggon, wain, cart, or carriage drawn by animal power when descending a hill; unless there is placed at the bottom of such wheel during the whole time of its being locked a skidpan, slipper, or shoe in such manner as to prevent the road from being destroyed or injured by the locking of such wheel; and (4) for prohibiting or regulating the erection of gates across highways, and prohibiting gates opening outwards on highways.

574. A local authority in whose district a street tramway is laid may make regulations as to the speed of tramcars, the distances to be maintained between cars (g), the stopping of cars, and the traffic Metropolitan Streets Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 18), s. 2. The penalty is a sum not exceeding 10s. per beast (Metropolitan Streets Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 134), s. 7). on any road in which the tramway is laid (h). Nothing in the Tramways Act, 1870 (i), is to limit the powers of a local authority or of the police to regulate street traffic, including tramcars, on or off any tramway (j); and nothing in that Act, or any bye-law made thereunder, is to abridge the right of the public to use every part of a road along which a tramway is laid with carriages not having flange wheels or wheels suitable only to run on the tram rails (k); but the public must not use on the tramway carriages having such wheels (l), and must act reasonably in moving off the rails to make room for cars (m).

SECT. 3.
Restrictions
as to Traffic.

575. In places where the necessary provisions of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907 (n), are in force, the local authority may make and enforce bye-laws, to be approved by the Home Secretary (o), prescribing the nature of the traffic for which esplanades or promenades may be used, regulating selling and hawking thereon, and for preserving order and good conduct (p), and may also make and enforce bye-laws for the prevention of danger, obstruction or annoyance to persons using the seashore (q).

576. In places where the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907 (r), s. 84, is in force, the local authority may grant to any person a licence to carry on the calling of a luggage porter, light porter, public messenger, or commissioner, and may include therein conditions as to the badge which the holder shall wear (s). An unlicensed person who represents himself to be licensed or who wears any badge for such a purpose is liable to a penalty not exceeding 20s. (t). A licence expires on the 31st March next following its issue; it may, however, be granted for a less period and may be suspended, revoked or indorsed by the local authority for a breach of the bye-laws, or whenever the authority deems necessary in the public interest, but the existence of the power to suspend, revoke or indorse a licence must be plainly set forth in the licence (u).

A penalty not exceeding 40s. is incurred by any unauthorised person who occupies a standing, or by any person who fraudulently puts on or imitates the dress or takes the name, designation or character of any authorised shoeblack or commissionaire, or who molests or obstructs any authorised shoeblack, commissionaire or messenger in the exercise of his calling (c).

578. An urban authority (d) may license the proprietors, drivers and conductors of horses, ponies, mules or asses standing for hire within the district, in like manner and with the like incidents and consequences as in the case of proprietors and drivers of hackney carriages (e), and may make bye-laws for regulating stands and fixing rates of hire, and as to the qualification of such drivers and conductors, and for securing their good and orderly conduct whilst in charge.

Carriage of noxious matters.

579. An urban authority which has adopted the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890 (f), Part III., may make bye-laws prescribing the times for the carriage through the streets of any faecal or offensive or noxious matter or liquid; for providing for proper carts or receptacles being used; and for compelling the cleansing of any place on which such matter or liquid may be dropped or spilt (g).

In London the County Council must make, and every sanitary authority (h) must observe and enforce, bye-laws for prescribing the times for the removal or carriage by road or water of any faecal or offensive matter or liquid in or through London, and providing that the carriage or vessel used therefor shall be properly constructed and covered so as to prevent the escape of any such matter or liquid, and so as to prevent any nuisance arising therefrom (i).

Part II.—Traffic Nuisances and Offences.

581. It is unlawful to sink any pit or shaft, or to erect or cause to be erected any steam engine, gin or other like machine, or any machinery attached thereto, within twenty-five yards, or any windmill within fifty yards of any part of a public carriageway or cartway, unless the same is within a building or sufficiently screened by a wall or fence; or to make or cause to be made any fire for calcining or burning ironstone, limestone, bricks, clay or coke within fifteen yards of any part of a public carriageway or cartway, unless such fire is within a building or sufficiently screened by a wall or fence (k). The foregoing provisions do not, however, prevent the use, repair or enlarging of windmills, engines, machines, kilns or other erections existing on the 31st August, 1835 (l). Portable steam threshing machines and engines (m), and locomotives used for ploughing (n), are also exempt from such provisions, if certain precautions are observed in using them.

(k) Highway Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), s. 70. A penalty may be imposed not exceeding £5 a day (ibid.). Mens rea is essential (Harrison v. Leaper (1862), 26 J. P. 373). The screen need not be a substantial fence if it is effective as a screen (Blakeley v. Baker (1878), 39 L. T. 359). As to the duty of fencing, see, further, titles BOUNDARIES, FENCES, AND PARTY WALLS, Vol. III., p. 130; HIGHWAYS, STREETS, AND BRIDGES, Vol. XVI., p. 169. It is for the justices to say whether the locus in quo is a highway or not (Williams v. Adams (1862), 2 B. & S. 312; R. v. Bradley (1894), 58 J. SECT. 2. gipsy, or other traveller, to pitch any tent, booth, stall, or stand, or encamp on any part of any highway; or to make or assist in making any fire, or wantonly to fire any gun or pistol, or set fire to or wantonly to let off any firework within fifty feet of the centre of any public carriageway or cartway; or to bait, or run for the purpose of baiting, any bull upon or near any highway; or to suffer any filth, dirt, lime, or other offensive matter or thing whatsoever (t) to run into any highway from any adjacent building, lands or premises, to the injury of the highway or to the injury, interruption or danger of any passenger thereon (u).

Miscellaneous Offences under the Highway Acts.

Camping on highway.

Fires, fire-arms, fire-works, bull-baiting, or nuisance on highway.

Driver riding on cart and not holding reins.

Driver causing injury by negligence.

Driving cart without name and refusing owner's name.

Non-observance of rules of road and hindering passage.

* 583. It is an offence (w) for the driver (a) of any wagon, cart or other carriage (b) of any kind to ride on it (c), or on a horse drawing it on any highway, unless he has some other person on foot or on horseback to guide it, or unless all the horses drawing it are being guided by reins; for the driver of any carriage whatsoever on any part of any highway by negligence or wilful misbehaviour to cause any hurt to any person, horse, cattle or goods conveyed in any carriage, passing or being on such highway, or to quit the highway and go to the other side of the hedge or fence, or negligently or wilfully to be at such a distance from the carriage, or in such a situation whilst it is passing upon the highway (d), that he cannot have control of his horse or horses, or to leave any cart or carriage on a highway so as to obstruct the passage thereof (e); for any person to drive any wagon, cart, or similar carriage not bearing the owner's name (f), and to refuse to disclose such name (g); for the driver of any wagon, cart or other carriage whatsoever, or of any

(t) The ejusdem generis rule of construction has been applied to these words (Crosdill v. Ratcliff (1862), 26 J. P. 165); see title HIGHWAYS, STREETS, AND BRIDGES, Vol. XVI., p. 168, note (i); compare title STATUTES, pp. 145, 146, ante. For a form of notice by a highway authority to remove nuisances on a highway, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. VI., p. 413.

Somerset* (1887), 51 J. P. 742). The words create only two offences, namely, injury to the highway and injury, interruption or danger to a passenger (Smith v. Perry (1905), 70 J. P. 93); see title HIGHWAYS, STREETS, AND BRIDGES, Vol. XVI., p. 168, note (l); and compare title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. V., pp. 775 et seq.

(a) The word "driver" has been held to extend to a person riding on horseback (Williams v. Evans (1876), 1 Ex. D. 277).

(b) Including a cycle; see p. 335, post.

(c) It has been said that if a cart was standing still a driver sitting on the cart could not be regarded as "riding" on it (Parton v. Williams (1820), 3 B. & Ald. 330, per BAYLEY, J., at pp. 336, 337).

(d) A carriage is still "passing upon" the highway if the driver stops it temporarily and leaves it (Phythian v. Barendale, [1895] 1 Q. B. 768).

(e) The fact that a boy is left in charge does not necessarily preclude justices from convicting under this clause (Hinde v. Evans (1906), 70 J. P. 548).

(f) See p. 271, ante.

(g) Compare Jones v. Owen (1823), 2 Dow. & Ry. (κ. B.) 600, decided under the corresponding provision in stat. (1773) 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 60 (now repealed).

horse or other beast of draught or burden, when meeting any other carriage, horse or beast of burden, not to keep to the near side of the road; for any person in any manner wilfully to prevent any other person from passing him or any carriage, horse, or beast of burden under his care upon a highway, or by negligence or misbehaviour to hinder the free passage of any person, carriage, horse, or beast of burden on any highway, or not to keep his own carriage, horse or beast of burden on the near side of the road for the purpose of allowing such passage (h).

Drivers committing any of the above offences may be arrested without warrant by an eye-witness (i).

SECT. 2.
Miscellaneous Offences under the Highway Acts.

SECT. 3.—Furious or Dangerous Riding and Driving.

584. Any person who on any highway rides any horse or beast furiously, so as to endanger the life or limb of any passenger, is liable to a penalty not exceeding £5 (k).

Furious riding and driving.

Any person who on any highway drives any sort of carriage (l) furiously, so as to endanger the life or limb of any passenger, is liable, if he be the owner, to a penalty not exceeding £10, and, if he be not, to one not exceeding £5, and may be arrested without warrant by any eye-witness (m).

A person in charge of a vehicle who by wanton or furious driving or racing or other wilful misconduct or wilful neglect does, or causes to be done, bodily harm to any person, is liable to imprisonment with hard labour for two years (n).

Doing bodily harm by furious driving.

In an urban (o) district any person, who in any street, to the obstruction, annoyance, or danger of the residents or passengers, rides or drives furiously any horse or carriage, or drives furiously any cattle, is liable to a penalty not exceeding 40s., or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding fourteen days, and may be arrested without warrant by any constable witnessing the offence (p).

In urban streets.

(h) No offence is committed under this provision by a driver who keeps to the off side of the road if the driver of the only other vehicle on the road consents to overtake him on the near side (Nuttall v. Pickering, [1913] 1 K. B. 14).

SECT. 3.
Furious or Dangerous Riding and Driving.

Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907, s. 79.

Cattle on highway*

In districts where the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907 (q), s. 79, is in force, any person riding or driving so as to endanger the life or limb of any person, or to the common danger of the passengers in any thoroughfare, is liable to a penalty not exceeding 40s., and may be arrested without warrant by any constable witnessing the offence (r).

SECT. 4.—Cattle Straying on Highways and Streets.

585. If any horse, mare, gelding, bull, ox, cow, heifer, steer, calf, mule, ass, sheep, lamb, goat, kid, or swine is found straying on or lying about (s) any highway, or across any part thereof, or by the sides thereof, except on such parts of any highway as pass over any common or waste or uninclosed ground (t), the owner is liable to a penalty, not exceeding 5s. for each animal or 30s. in all, together with the reasonable expense of removing the animals to his field or stable, or to the parish pound or other place provided, and any proper charges of the pound-keeper (u). This provision is not to be deemed to take away any right of pasturage which may exist on the sides of any highway (u); but an owner exercising his right must keep his animals from straying, except temporarily, or lying on the actual road (r).

streets.

(r) Ibid., s. 79; see note (u), p. 273, ante.

(s) The offences of allowing to "stray" and allowing to "lie about" are distinct (Lawrence v. King (1868), L. R. 3 Q. B. 345). Animals are not "straying" if they are under the control of an attendant (Lawrence v. King, supra; Morris v. Jeffries (1866), L. R. 1 Q. B. 261; Sherborn v. Wells (1863), 3 B. & S. 784; Golding v. Stocking (1869), L. R. 4 Q. B. 516; Horwood v. Goodall, Horwood v. Hill (1872), 36 J. P. 486). If they are "lying about," the presence of a keeper is not in itself an excuse (Lawrence v. King, supra); but, apparently, animals on a journey may be allowed to rest for a reasonable time (ibid., per BLACKBURN, J.; compare Horwood v. Goodall, Horwood v. Hill, supra). As to the civil liability for animals straying, see Ellis v. Banyard (1911), 106 L. T. 51, C. A.; Higgins v. Searle (1909), 73 J. P. 185, C. A.; Hadwell v. Righton, [1907] 2 K. B. 345; Cox v. Burbidge (1863), 13 C. B. (N. S.) 430; Jones v. Lee (1911), 76 J. P. 137. As to cattle trespassing from a highway, see titles ANIMALS, Vol. I., pp. 377, 378; NEGLIGENCE, Vol. XXI., p. 410.

(t) As to this exception, which only applies to pieces of land of some considerable size, see Bothamley v. Danby (1871), 24 L. T. 656; Golding v. Stocking, supra; Plumley v. Lock (1903), 67 J. P. 237.

Provision is made for the sale of impounded cattle, if the money is not paid within three days (e), and for punishing persons guilty of pound-breach (f). The authority may provide and maintain a pound (g).

Cattle Straying on Highways

587. In London a person may not permit any swine to stray or go about in any street or public place (h). Swine found so doing may be removed by a constable, and may be ordered to be forfeited (i). Pigs straying.

SECT. 5.—Bye-laws as to Behaviour in Streets.

588. Bye-laws for good rule and government may be made (1) outside London, for a borough by the borough council (k), and for any portion of a county not within a borough by the county council (l); (2) in London, by the London County Council (l), and for any particular metropolitan borough by the council thereof (m). Bye-laws as to behaviour in streets.

Under these provisions bye-laws have been made as to such matters as lights upon vehicles (n); noisy instruments and singing in streets (o); offensive or indecent language or behaviour in streets (p), or on tramcars (q); roundabouts, swings, and shooting galleries in or near streets (r); street betting (s); street shouting and hawking (t); and strewing paper, refuse, or glass in streets (u). A bye-law prohibiting the distribution of betting newspapers has been held to be invalid (w).

A local authority which does not itself undertake or contract for the cleansing of footways and pavements adjoining any premises may make bye-laws imposing the duty of such cleansing at such intervals as it thinks fit on the occupier of any such premises (x). An urban authority may also make bye-laws for the prevention of nuisances arising from snow, filth, dust, ashes, and rubbish (a).

589. In London it is the duty of every sanitary authority to make, observe, and enforce bye-laws for the prevention of nuisances arising from any snow, ice, salt, dust, ashes, rubbish, offal, carrion, fish, or filth, or other matter or thing in any street (b). Such bye-laws are not, however, to prohibit the laying of sand or other material in time of frost, or of litter or other matter to prevent the freezing of water in pipes, or in case of sickness to prevent noise, if the same is laid, and when the occasion ceases removed, 'in accordance with the bye-laws (c).

SECT. 6.—Street Processions and Public Meetings.

Processions.

590. To organise, or take part in, a procession along a highway is not necessarily an improper use of such highway. Apart from any statute or authorised regulations, the test is, apparently, whether in all the circumstances such procession is a reasonable use of the highway, and not merely whether it is likely to lead to an obstruction (d).

(i) As to what is, or is to be deemed, a street for this purpose, see title PUBLIC HEALTH AND LOCAL ADMINISTRATION, Vol. XXIII., p. 402, note (h). A shallow embayment between bow-windows is not necessarily part of the street (Piggott v. Goldstraw (1901), 65 J. P. 259; compare Hitchman v. Watt (1894), 58 J. P. 720; *Openshaw v. If there is a permanent physical obstacle, a magistrate ought apparently to find that it is an obstruction within this provision, although it is small and leaves ample room for all who desire to pass (Read v. Perrett (1876), 1 Ex. D. 349; Gabriel v. St. James, Westminster, Vestry (1859), 23 J. P. 372). At the same time he may in some cases treat the offence as a "trifling" one (Dunning v. Tindiner (1909), 73 J. P. 400). Even in the case of non-permanent or moving obstacles, where there is wilful obstruction, there may be an offence although no one is in fact obstructed (Dunn v. Holt (1904), 68 J. P. 271; Hinde v. Evans (1906), 70 J. P. 548; M'Kee v. M'Grath (1892), 30 L. R. Ir. 41). It is for the justices to find whether the locus is a street or not (Williams v. Adams (1862), 2 B. & S. 312; R. v. Young (1883), 47 J. P. 519; Hitchman v. Watt, supra); or, if a defendant claims a right to obstruct it by reason of a conditional or limited dedication, to decide whether the claim is made out (Whittaker v. Rhodes (1881), 46 J. P. 182; Leicester Urban Authority v. Holland (1888), 52 J. P. 788; Jones v. Matthews (1886), 1 T. L. R. 482; Spice v. Peacock (1875), 39 J. P. 581; but see *R. (Christie) v. SECT. 7.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Within the Metropolis.

Miscellaneous Street Offences.

Street offences
in the Metropolis.

592. In the Metropolis (c) it is an offence to sweep or throw any dirt or rubbish over any sewer grating or into any public drain or sewer (d); to beat or dust carpets in streets; to break, exercise, try or show for sale horses in streets; to throw or cause to be thrown any dirt, filth or annoyance, or any matter or thing upon the carriageway or footway of any street; to kill or cut up any beast in or so near to a street that any blood or filth runs on to the carriageway or footway; to place or draw, or suffer to be placed or drawn, upon the footway of any street any sledge, wagon, cart, or carriage, or any wheel, truck or barrow, or any barrel; wilfully to ride, lead or drive any horse, ass, mule, or other beast upon the footway of any street (e); to place, or permit any servant to place, any stall board (f), chopping block, show board, basket, goods, or casks on the carriageway or footway of any street; to hoop, place, wash, or cleanse, or cause to be hooped, washed, or cleansed, any pipe, barrel or vessel on the footway or carriageway of any street; to set out, lay or place, or suffer to be set out, laid or placed, any coach, cart, wagon, barrow, sledge, truck, or other carriage upon the carriageway of any street, except coaches, chariots and chairs duly licensed to stand for hire, except for the necessary time of loading or unloading, taking up or setting down fares, or waiting for passengers when actually hired, or harnessing or unharnessing; to place, or cause to be placed, on the carriageway or footway of any street any timber, stone, bricks, lime, or other building materials, unless fenced or inclosed in accordance with some statute, or any other matters or things whatsoever; to hang out or expose, or cause to be hung out or exposed, any meat or offal or other matter or thing whatsoever (g) from any house, building, or premises over any part of the carriageway or footway of any street or over any area; or to place or put out, or permit to be placed or put out, any garden or other pots, not safely secured from falling, or any other matter or thing on or from any part of a house, building or premises next to any street (h).

(c) Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102), s. 73; Fulham Board of Works v. Smith (1884), 48 J. P. 375; see, further, title METROPOLIS, Vol. XX., pp. 393 et seq. Many of the matters dealt with in the text, supra, and on pp. 287 et seq., post, are also regulated by the bye-laws of the London County Council; see p. 279, ante.

(h) Metropolitan Paving Act, 1817 (57 Geo. 3, c. xxix.), s. 65; Wyatt v. Gems, [1893] 2 Q. B. 225; in the case of most of the offences named a warning is necessary (Metropolitan Paving Act, 1817 (57 Geo. 3, c. xxix.), s. 65); as to repeated warnings not being required, see ibid., s. 66. The person making the complaint need not be authorised in writing to do so (Keep v. Alexander (1909), 73 J. P. 423). Obstructing articles may be seized, although there has been no conviction (Brackley v. St. Mary, Battersea, Vestry (1889), 23 Q. B. D. 486, C. A.). As to removing projections, see Metropolitan Paving Act, 1817 (57 Geo. 3, c. xxix.), s. 72; Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 119;

593. Within the Metropolitan Police District (i) there are statutory provisions in respect of the following matters (k):—Exposing for sale, foddering, farrying, grooming, exercising or breaking horses or animals; showing caravans; washing or repairing carriages (l); turning loose horses or cattle; turning loose or inciting to fight ferocious dogs; negligence or misbehaviour in connexion with the driving of cattle; pelting or hunting driven cattle; drivers not having control of their carts; obstruction by causing vehicles to stand (m); riding or driving on footways; rolling casks, hoops or wheels, or carrying ladders, poles etc. on footways; damaging or defacing walls, fences, public trees or shrubs or public seats (n); bill-posting without consent on walls or fences; solicitation by prostitutes (o); selling, distributing or exhibiting indecent books or prints (p); singing profane or indecent songs; using profane or indecent language; writing or drawing indecent words or pictures (q); threatening or insulting language and behaviour; blowing or playing noisy instruments to call persons together or for the purposes of hawking; letting off firearms or fireworks; lighting bonfires; ringing bells or knocking at doors; flying kites, playing games or making slides; washing or firing casks; sawing timber; screening or slacking lime; depositing dirt, litter (r), offal, or rubbish; shaking or beating carpets or mats, except door mats before 8 a.m.; exposing anything for sale in parks or public gardens without the owner's consent, or upon, or so as to hang over, any carriageway or footway or on the outside of any house or shop (s); causing obstruction by poles, blinds, awnings, lines or other projections (t); leaving cellars or areas open or unfenced (a).

 Offences.

Costermongers and hawkers.

to the passage of the public for a longer time than may be absolutely necessary for loading or unloading them; but this prohibition does not apply to costermongers, street hawkers or itinerant traders, so long as they carry on their business in accordance with the police regulations (b). The Common Council of the City of London may make regulations as to costermongers, street hawkers, and itinerant traders: such regulations, whilst in force, supersede within the City of London the statutory provisions and police regulations on the subject (c).

Loading or unloading coal or casks.

595. In certain streets within six miles from Charing Cross between 10 a.m. and 6 p.m. no coal (d) may be loaded or unloaded on or across any footway, and no cask, whether empty or full, wine or spirits in cask excepted, may be lowered or drawn up by means of ropes, chains or other machinery passing across any part of the footway (e). Within the City of London the Common Council may also make regulations as to the loading and unloading of coal, coke, and beer casks (f).

Riding on carriages.

596. In the Metropolitan Police District (g) it is an offence for any person to ride upon or cause himself to be carried or drawn by any carriage without the consent of the owner or driver (h).

Advertisements.

597. Within six miles from Charing Cross no picture, print, board, placard or notice, except in such form and manner as may be approved of by the Commissioner of Metropolitan or City Police, as the case may be, may be carried or distributed by way of advertisement in any street by any person on foot or riding in any vehicle or on horseback; but this provision does not apply to the sale of newspapers (i).

Offences.

599. Any householder within the Metropolitan Police District may personally, or by a servant, or constable, require any street musician or singer to leave the neighbourhood of his house on account of (n) the illness of any inmate or of the interruption of the ordinary occupations or pursuits of inmates, or for other reasonable or sufficient cause. A person playing or singing in defiance of such a request may be given into custody, and is liable to a fine not exceeding 40s. or to imprisonment for a period not exceeding three days (o).

601. A metropolitan police constable may arrest without warrant (b) persons found between sunset and 8 a.m. loitering in any highway, yard, or other place, and not giving a satisfactory account of themselves (c). He may also detain vehicles removing furniture at night, or for the purpose of evading payment of rent (d).

Loitering.

602. In the Metropolis no person may between 10 a.m. and 7 p.m. in such streets (e) as may be named by the Commissioner of Metropolitan or City Police, as the case may be, remove any ashes, dust, or refuse from any house in any street (f).

Part III.—Lights on Vehicles.

SECT. 1

Obligation to Carry Lights.

Statutory enactment.
Vehicles subject to the statute.

SECT. 1.—Obligation to Carry Lights.

603. Throughout England and Wales the Lights on Vehicles Act, 1907 (h), provides for the carrying of lights at night by vehicles to which it applies.

Subject to certain exemptions (i) the statute applies to vehicles of every kind, including those in the public service of the Crown, except:—(1) Cycles or velocipedes required to carry lamps by the Local Government Act, 1888 (k); (2) light locomotives or motor cars required to do so by the Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896 (l), or regulations thereunder (m); (3) other locomotives required to do so by the Locomotives Act, 1865 (n), as amended by the Locomotives Act, 1898 (o); (4) wagons drawn by such last-mentioned locomotives; and (5) vehicles drawn or propelled by hand (p). It also applies to machines and implements of every kind drawn by animal traction (q).

Nature of obligation:
(1) liability of master;
head lights;

tail lights;

604. Every person who causes or permits (r) any vehicle (s) to be in any street, highway, or road to which the public have access during the period between one hour after sunset and one hour before sunrise (t) must provide the same with a lamp or lamps in proper working order, and so constructed and capable of being so attached as when lighted to display to the front a white light visible for a reasonable distance; if only one lamp is provided, it must be placed on the off-side (u). If the lamp or lamps are so constructed as to permit a light to be seen from the rear, such light must be red (w); moreover, if the vehicle is used for the purpose of carrying any load projecting more than 6 feet to the rear, the provision of

(p) Lights on Vehicles Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 45), s. 5 (1), (4).

(q) Ibid., s. 5 (2). The term "vehicle" is not defined in the Act, but it may be taken as comprising every carriage, cart, wagon, truck, conveyance, machine, and implement drawn by animal traction, and propelled or drawn by mechanical power, except such as fall within the exceptions and exemptions mentioned in the text, supra.

(r) In the case of a vehicle in the public service of the Crown, the person whom the department using such vehicle names as actually responsible is to be treated as the person causing or permitting the vehicle to be used (ibid., s. 5 (4)).

(t) Sunset and sunrise must be determined according to local, and not Greenwich, time (Gordon v. Cann (1899), 68 L. J. (Q. B.) 434); see title TIME, p. 441, post.

a proper lamp or lamps to display a red light to the rear is obligatory (x).

Every person driving or being in charge of any vehicle in any street, highway, or road to which the public have access during the period above mentioned must keep such lamp or lamps properly trimmed, lighted and attached (y).

SECT. 1.
Obligation to Carry Lights.

(2) liability of driver.

605. On the 31st December, 1907, existing statutory bye-laws and provisions in local and personal Acts with respect to the carrying of lights on vehicles ceased to apply to vehicles within the Lights on Vehicles Act, 1907 (a); but this provision did not affect any statutory power to make fresh bye-laws or regulations imposing obligations additional to those imposed by that Act (b).

Additional obligations under bye-laws.

SECT. 2.—Offences and Penalties.

606. A person offending against any provision of the Lights on Vehicles Act, 1907 (c), is liable upon summary conviction for each offence to a penalty not exceeding 40s., and in the case of a second or subsequent conviction to a penalty not exceeding £5 (d).

Fine.

607. A person driving or in charge of a vehicle is not to be convicted of an offence under the Act, if he satisfies the court that such offence arose through the neglect or default of some other person whose duty it was to provide the vehicle with a lamp or lamps (e).

Driver

SECT. 3.—Exemptions.

608. Vehicles in the public service of the Crown may, in the interests of the naval or military service, be excepted by Order in Council from the provisions of the Lights on Vehicles Act, 1907 (f).

Vehicles in public service.

609. The council of a county may by order exempt from the operation of the Act vehicles carrying any farm produce to stack or barn in the course of harvesting operations, during such months or periods of the year as may be specified in the order. Such an order may apply to the whole or to a part only of the county. A copy of it must be sent as soon as may be to the Home Secretary, and it must be published in such manner as the council thinks best adapted for giving public notice thereof (g).

SECT. 3.

Exemptions.

Vehicles carrying inflammable goods or within dangerous areas.

610. The London County Council, the Common Council of the City of London (h), and the council of any extra-metropolitan borough (i) may, by order approved by the Home Secretary, exempt from the operation of the Act, subject to any conditions mentioned in the order, (1) any vehicle carrying any inflammable goods of a kind specified in the order, or (2) any vehicle being within any place specified in the order in which the council considers that it would be dangerous to enforce the provisions of the Act owing to inflammable goods being usually stored or dealt with in or near such place (j). Within the area under the control of the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board the power of making such an exemption order is vested in the Board to the exclusion of the borough council (k). Notice of any proposed order and of the mode of lodging objections thereto, and also of any order when made and approved, must be given by the authority in such manner as the Home Secretary directs; before approving any proposed order the Home Secretary must consider any objections, and may cause a local inquiry to be held (l).

Part IV.—Hackney and Stage Carriages.

SECT. 1.—Statutory Enactments.

Stage carriages.

611. Throughout England "stage carriages" (m) are subject to the provisions of the Stage Carriages Act, 1832 (n), as amended by later enactments (o). There is no general enactment regulating the ordinary use of "hackney carriages"; but there are provisions restricting the use of public carriages at parliamentary and municipal elections (p), and also certain sanitary provisions intended to prevent infectious diseases being spread by the use of such carriages (q).

(p) See title ELECTIONS, Vol. XII., pp. 303, 348.

(q) See title PUBLIC HEALTH AND LOCAL ADMINISTRATION, Vol. XXIII., p. 452.

(r) The Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 171, applies the provisions in question to all urban districts; they may be put in force in rural districts by an order of the Local Government Board under ibid., s. 276.

(s) As to the Metropolitan Police District, see title POLICE, Vol. XXII., pp. 466, 467.

"omnibuses" (t) (a term which includes "stage carriages") are subject to the provisions of the Town Police Clauses Acts, 1847 (u) and 1889 (w).

SECT. 1.
Statutory Enactments.

Within the Metropolitan Police District (a) "hackney carriages" and "stage carriages" (b) are subject to the provisions of special enactments (c).

Metropolitan hackney and stage
carriages.

The fuller and wider provisions of the special enactments practically render obsolete in districts where they are in force those of the general enactments as to "stage carriages"; but in theory, at any rate, such carriages are in all urban and some rural districts still subject to both sets of provisions.

A local authority has the like power of making rules and regulations and granting licences with respect to tramcars, their drivers and conductors, passengers, and standing places, as it has with respect to hackney carriages (d).

Tramcars.

A light railway car is not a tramcar (e), but within the Metropolitan Police District light railway cars used on streets or roads are subject to the last-mentioned provisions, and to enactments relating to stage carriages, as if they were tramcars (f).

Light railway cars.

SECT. 2.—Stage Carriages.

612. The term "stage carriage" appears to include any vehicle, other than a railway carriage, used for the conveyance of passengers who are charged separate and distinct fares, or at the rate of separate and distinct fares, for their respective seats (g).

(g) The definition contained in the Stage Carriages Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 120), s. 5, excluded railway carriages and carriages not drawn by animal power; the first exception does not extend to tramcars (Brian v. Aylward (1902), 18 T. L. R. 371); the second was abrogated as regards light locomotives by the Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 36), s. 1 (1) (b). The definition in question was repealed by the Revenue Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 14), which abolished the licence duty on such carriages. For the definitions in the Town Police Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 89), s. 38, see pp. 294 et seq., post; for the definitions in the Metropolitan Public Carriage Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 115), ss. 4, 5, see

Stage

 General provisions as to stage
 carriages.

613. Every stage carriage must bear painted upon it in the prescribed manner the christian name and surname of the proprietor, or of one of the proprietors (h), and the number of passengers which it is constructed to carry, whether inside or outside (i). Stage carriages of certain dimensions are not allowed to carry luggage on the roof (j); in any case luggage loaded on the roof is not to exceed a certain height from the ground (k), and no person may be allowed to sit upon such luggage (l). An average of 16 inches is to be allowed for each passenger's seat; and, in the case of carriages of a certain build, the number of outside passengers is limited by provisions intended to secure stability (m). No carriage is to be allowed to carry, either in the whole or inside or outside, more passengers than the number which it is constructed to carry (n). Only one passenger may be allowed to sit beside the driver on the box seat (o). Provision is made for the counting of passengers and the measuring of carriages and luggage (p). Drivers and conductors may be punished for reckless conduct and misbehaviour (q), and in some cases the proprietor is made responsible for their conduct (r). There is an appeal against a conviction (r).

railway car (w), or an omnibus (x) or other stage coach used for the purpose of standing or plying for passengers to be carried for hire at separate fares (y); but with these exceptions it includes any wheeled carriage, of whatever form or construction (a), used in standing or plying for hire (b) in any street (c) within the particular urban district, and any carriage standing upon such a street and bearing any numbered plate required to be fixed upon a hackney carriage or any plate resembling or intended to resemble such a plate (d).

p. 334, post. An owner need not pay duty on "spare" cabs until they are brought into use (London County Council v. Fairbank, [1911] 2 K. B. 32). Apart from any statutory definition, a hackney carriage means a carriage exposed for hire to the public, whether standing in the public street or in a private yard (Bateson v. Oddy (1874), 38 J. P. 598).

(w) Yorkshire (Woolen District) Electric Tramways v. Ellis, [1905] 1 K. B. 396. As to tramcars and light railway cars, see p. 293, ante; and, generally, title TRAMWAYS AND LIGHT RAILWAYS, pp. 795, 796, 818, note (f), post.

(a) Including motor cabs, for by the Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 36), s. 1 (1) (b), a "light locomotive," if used as a carriage of any particular class, is to be deemed to be a carriage of that class, and the law relating to carriages of that class is to apply to it. A motor cab must, of course, be registered as a motor car, as to which see p. 316, post. As to the duty payable on a motor hackney carriage, see title REVENUE, Vol. XXIV., p. 692.

(b) A licensed hackney carriage is none the less "used in standing or plying for hire" because at the moment it is employed otherwise (Hawkins v. Edwards, [1901] 2 K. B. 169). A carriage "plies for hire" even though the driver only asks for voluntary contributions from passengers (Cocks v. Mayner (1893), 58 J. P. 104). A specially engaged carriage does not ply for hire (Cavill v. Amos (1900), 64 J. P. 309).

(c) The word "street" does not include a railway company's roadway to their station or other private property (Curtis v. Embery (1872), L. R. 7 Exch. 369; Jones v. Short (1900), 64 J. P. 247; Case v. Storey (1869), L. R. 4 Exch. 319; Skinner v. Usher (1872), L. R. 7 Q. B. 423; but see Marks v. Ford (1880), 45 J. P. 157). Apart from the qualifying words "in any street" a carriage may be said to be "plying for hire" if standing ready to take up passengers on private property (Clarke v. Stanford (1871), L. R. 6 Q. (f) Including a motor omnibus, if a "light locomotive"; see note (a), supra. Such an omnibus must, of course, also be registered as a motor car, as to which see p. 316, post.

(g) As to the omission of the words "in any street" found in the definition of a hackney carriage, see note (c), supra. Apparently, "plying or standing" means licensed to ply or stand, even though at the moment otherwise employed; see note (b), supra.

Licences which may be granted.

616. An urban authority (l), or rural authority with the necessary urban powers (m), may license (1) such number of hackney carriages and omnibuses to ply for hire within its district as it thinks fit (n); and (2) persons to act as drivers of licensed hackney carriages and as drivers and conductors of licensed omnibuses (o). In granting or refusing such licences it may exercise a just and reasonable discretion (p); and in the case of drivers and conductors may require an applicant to attend in person (q). A licence endures normally for a year from its date, or until the next annual licensing day, where one is fixed (r), but it may be granted for any less period

Licences for vehicles.

617. Each vehicle requires a separate licence, which must be under the seal of the council (a), and must specify the name, surname, and place of abode of every proprietor or part proprietor of the vehicle, or person concerned in the keeping or hiring thereof (b); it must also specify a number, to correspond with that to be affixed to the vehicle, and such other particulars as the council thinks fit (b). For each licence the council may demand a fee not exceeding 5s. (c). A requisition for a licence, in such form as the council provides, must be made and signed by the proprietor or one of the proprietors, as the case may be, and must give the details required to be recorded on the licence (d). The licence must be made out by the clerk to the council and entered in a register, which is to be open to inspection by anyone, without fee, at all reasonable times, and is to contain spaces for recording any offence by the proprietor, driver, or conductor of, or any person attending, the vehicle (e). Notice of any change of abode must be given within seven days, and the licence must be produced for the necessary alterations to be indorsed thereon (f).

618. A driver's or conductor's licence, for which 1s. must be paid, must be registered by the clerk to the council (g). It must be delivered to the proprietor of the vehicle, and be retained by him whilst the licensee remains in his employ; and it must be produced by him if he is summoned to answer a complaint or to produce the licensee (h). It must be returned forthwith to the latter if he leaves his employment without having been guilty of any misconduct. If he has been so guilty, the proprietor must retain the licence, and forthwith issue a summons to have his cause of complaint determined (i). The driver of a motor hackney carriage or motor omnibus will require also the ordinary motor car driver's licence (k). The proprietor of a licensed public stage or hackney carriage need not pay duty as for male servants in respect of persons necessarily employed to drive the same, or in the care of it (l).

619. An urban authority (m) may make bye-laws—(1) for regulating the conduct of the proprietors, drivers, and conductors of hackney carriages and omnibuses in their several employments, and for determining whether drivers and conductors shall wear any and what badges, and, in the case of hackney carriages, for regulating the hours within which proprietors and drivers may exercise their calling (n); and (2) for securing the safe custody and redelivery of any property accidentally left in hackney carriages and fixing the charges to be made in respect thereof (o).

It may also make bye-laws—(1) as to hackney carriages, to regulate the number of horses or other animals to draw the same, the provision of check strings, and furnishing of carriages (p); (2) as to omnibuses, to regulate the number and secure the fitness of the animals to be allowed to draw an omnibus, and the removal therefrom of unfit animals; to secure the fitness of omnibus and harness; to provide for the carrying and lighting of proper lamps (q) for denoting direction, and promoting the safety and convenience of passengers; and to prevent noisy touting by drivers and conductors, and the blowing of horns and similar noises (r).

Stands and

The latter provision prohibits the fixing of an omnibus stand in a railway station or station yard without the company's consent. Under an old statute a power to "direct and regulate" stands was held to give power to remove them (R. v. Rawlinson (1836), 6 B. & C. 23). A bye-law need not define the position of stands otherwise than as such stands as may from time to time be indicated by notice boards (Blackpool Local Board of Health v. Bennett (1859), 4 H. & N. 127); as to evidence of "plying" off the stands, see ibid. A bye-law may prohibit loitering (Murphy v. Neilson (1901), 3 Fraser (Justiciary Cases), 77; MacKenzie v. Somerville (1900), 3 Fraser (Justiciary Cases), 4). A driver, directed by a hotel-keeper to wait outside the hotel for any visitor who might want a cab may be convicted under such a bye-law (ibid.). 621. No hackney carriage or omnibus may be used or let for hire or stand or ply for hire within an urban district unless the number of persons to be carried is shown upon it in the manner required by the statute; and a driver or conductor cannot be required to carry a greater number of passengers (t). The authority may make bye-laws for regulating the number of persons to be carried (a).

622. The driver of a hackney carriage standing at an appointed stand or in any street must, unless he has a reasonable excuse (b), drive to any place, including private property with access for carriages (c), within the district, or within any less distance duly fixed by bye-law (d), to which he is directed to drive by a hirer or intending hirer (e). The driver or conductor of a hackney carriage or omnibus may not refuse to carry the full complement of passengers if required to do so (f). Without the express consent of the hirer the proprietor or driver of a hackney carriage must not suffer any person to be carried in, on, or about the carriage during the period of hire (g).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Fares.

623. The fares to be charged to hirers of hackney carriages are, unless fixed by a special Act (h), determined by the urban authority, which may make bye-laws for fixing the fares, both by time and distance, to be paid within its district, and for securing due publication thereof (i). An agreement to pay more than the authorised fare is invalid, and any excess overpaid may be recovered (k); but there is no objection to an agreement to accept less than the authorised fare (l). take a person for a drive of unstated length for a fixed sum, the hirer must be driven at least such a distance as that sum would entitle him to be driven according to the scale of fares in force (m). If a carriage is hired and taken to any place and there required to wait, the driver may demand his fare and also a deposit, calculated according to the time he is required to wait (n). If a person refuses to pay the legal fare it may be recovered summarily as a civil debt, together with costs (o).

Omnibuses.

624. The fares to be charged to passengers in omnibuses are fixed by the proprietors; but the urban authority may provide by bye-laws for the exhibition on some conspicuous part of every omnibus of a statement in legible letters and figures of the fares to be demanded (p). The fare so exhibited may be recovered as in the case of a hackney carriage fare, and no greater fare may be taken, but a less one may be agreed upon (q).

It is an offence, punishable summarily (r), when applying for a hackney carriage or omnibus licence to include in the requisition the name of any person who is not a proprietor or concerned in the keeping of the vehicle, or wilfully to omit to specify truly therein the name of any person who is (s); for a licensed proprietor of a hackney carriage or omnibus on changing his abode to fail duly to give notice thereof and produce the licence for indorsement (t); to permit a vehicle to be used as a hackney carriage or omnibus plying for hire within the district without having obtained a licence for it, or whilst such licence is suspended (u); to drive or stand or ply for hire with any hackney carriage or omnibus for which a licence has not been obtained, or without having the number of the vehicle, corresponding to the licence number, openly displayed (w); to act as driver or conductor of a licensed hackney carriage or omnibus without obtaining a licence, or whilst it is suspended (x); for a driver or conductor to lend his

SUB-SECT. 6.—Rights and Liabilities of Owners of Vehicles.

628. In the case of an omnibus or of a cab driven by a servant, the proprietor's common law liability for the acts of drivers and conductors is regulated by the ordinary law of master and servant (s); and it seems that, having regard to the nature of the legislation as to such vehicles, the same principles must be applied even where the relation between proprietor and driver is strictly that of bailor and bailee (t).

By statute, whenever any damage to person or property has been caused by a driver or conductor of a hackney carriage or omnibus, any justices convicting him may order a sum not exceeding £5 to be paid as compensation by the proprietor, who may recover it

SECT. 4.—Metropolitan Hackney and Stage Carriages.

629. Within the Metropolitan Police District (c) and the City of London (d) hackney and stage carriages and their drivers and conductors are licensed (e) by the Commissioner of Metropolitan Police, acting as deputy for the Home Secretary (f). For the purposes of the relevant statutes the term "hackney carriage" or "cab" (g) means any carriage for the conveyance of passengers which plies for hire within the Metropolis (h) and is not a "stage carriage" (i). A "stage carriage" means any carriage for the conveyance of passengers which plies for hire in any street, road, or place within the Metropolis, and in which the passengers or any of them pay separate and distinct, or at the rate of separate and distinct, fares for their respective places (j). Although stage carriages which on every journey go to or from some place beyond the Metropolis are not to be deemed carriages plying within the Metropolis (k), the Home Secretary may by order apply to such carriages, or to any class thereof, any of the statutory provisions relating to metropolitan stage carriages (l). Part V.—Locomotives and Motor Cars.

SECT. 1.—Definitions and Statutes.

631. The term "locomotive" means a locomotive propelled by steam or by other than animal power (a); it includes a steam roller (b).

632. Road locomotives fall into two main classes—heavy locomotives and light locomotives. The term "heavy locomotive" (c), though not recognised by statute, is almost universally used to denote any locomotive not within the statutory definition of a "light locomotive" or "motor car" (d).

(u) As to the statutory provisions on this point applicable unless overridden by regulations, see London Hackney Carriage Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 33), ss. 11, 19.

(w) Metropolitan Public Carriage Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 115), s. 15. As to the relevant statutory enactments, see note (c), p. 293, ante.

(x) See the Order of the Commissioner of Metropolitan Police of the 24th April, 1908 (London Gazette, 10th April, 1908); see Willingale v. Norris, [1909] 1 K. B. 57.

(c) The chief enactments regulating the use of heavy locomotives are (i.) the Locomotive Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 70), of which ss. 5 (prohibition of dangerous or destructive locomotives), 9 (persons in charge and lamps), 11 (speed limit), and 15 (extent of Act), and the orders made under them, were repealed by the Locomotives Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 83), s. 2, but would revive if that Act ceased to be continued; these provisions are ignored in this title; (ii.) the Locomotives Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 83), an annual Act (see ibid., s. 1), which, by ibid., s. 13, is to be construed as one with the Locomotive Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 70); (iii.) the Locomotives Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 29); (iv.) the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 77), Part II. of which is only in force so long as the Locomotives Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 83), is in force: the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 77), s. 28 (4), is varied by certain orders made by the Local Government Board dated respectively the 21st November, 1903, and the 7th August, 1905. There are also bye-laws made under the Locomotives Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 29), s. 6, by the councils of counties and large boroughs.

SECT. 1. 633. The terms "light locomotive" (e) and "motor car" (f) are practically (g) synonymous (h). They include, subject to certain Definitions and Statutes. limitations as to weight, any vehicle propelled by mechanical power, which is not used for the purpose of drawing more than one vehicle, and which is so constructed that no smoke or visible vapour "Light locomotive." is emitted therefrom except from some temporary or accidental cause (i).

Weight limits for motor cars.

634. The general weight limits for a motor car are as follows:— If the car is used without a trailer, its weight-unladen must not exceed 5 tons; if it draws a trailer, the unladen weights of the car and trailer must not in the aggregate exceed $6\frac{1}{2}$ tons (k). To this rule there are two exceptions, namely:—(1) in the case of military motor cars the limits without and with a trailer are 6 tons and 8 tons respectively (l); (2) a motor car first registered before the 1st Septem-

(e) This term is used in the Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 36).

(f) This term is used in the Motor Car Act, 1903 (3 Edw. 7, c. 36); the Motor Car (International Circulation) Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 37); and the Orders of the Local Government Board and Privy Council.

(g) In the Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 36), the term "light locomotive" includes any vehicle drawn by it; in the Motor Car Act, 1903 (3 Edw. 7, c. 36), the term "motor car" includes any vehicle drawn by it, except for the purposes of the provisions as to registration of cars; in the Motor Car Orders, the term "motor car" does not include a vehicle drawn by it. In the following pages the term "motor car" is used throughout instead of the term "light locomotive," and is used as denoting only the actual motor car, or cycle.

(h) Light locomotives (or motor cars) are, in general, exempt from the operation of the enactments mentioned in note (e), p. 305, ante, the only provisions applying being the Locomotive Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 70), ss. 1 (see p. 314, post), 7 (see p. 314, post), and 13 (see p. 315, post); see Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 36), s. 1, Sched.; Locomotives Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 29), s. 17 (2). They are also exempt from the provisions of any other public or local Act passed prior to the 14th August, 1896, and restricting the use of locomotives on highways. Their use is regulated by the Motor Car Acts, 1896 and 1903 (namely, the Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 36), and the Motor Car Act, 1903 (3 Edw. 7, c. 36), an annual Act; see ibid., s. 20 (3)); the Motor Car (International Circulation) Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 37); and the Motor Car (Registration and Licensing) Order, 1903; the Motor Cars (Use and Construction) Orders, 1904, 1909, 1911, and 1912; the Heavy Motor Car Orders, 1904, 1907, and 1911; and the Motor Car (International Circulation) Orders, 1910 and 1912, made thereunder by the Local Government Board and Privy Council. As to the excise duty on motor cars, see title REVENUE, Vol. XXIV., pp. 689 et seq.; as to the duty on motor bicycles and motor tricycles, see ibid., p. 689, note (f).

(i) If smoke is emitted owing to improper construction, the vehicle is not a motor car and is subject to the Acts regulating the use of heavy locomotives (Hindle and Palmer v. Noblett (1908), 72 J. P. 373); if it is emitted simply owing to careless driving, the vehicle does not on that account cease to be a motor car and lose its exemption (Star Omnibus Co. (London), Ltd. v. Tagg (1907), 71 J. P. 352; R. v. Wilbraham, Ex parte Rowcliffe (1907), 71 J. P. 338).

(k) Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 36), s. 1 (1); Motor Car Act, 1903 (3 Edw. 7, c. 36), s. 12 (1); Heavy Motor Car Order, 1904 (Stat. R. & O., 1904, p. 522), art. 3; Evans v. Nicholl, [1909] 1 K. B. 778.

ber, 1904, may, if properly re-registered, be still used notwithstanding that its weight unladen exceeds 5 tons, so long as it does not exceed 7 tons (m). In the case of a motor car within this exception the weight of any trailer drawn by it is apparently immaterial so long as the axle weight of any axle thereof does not exceed 4 tons (n).

SECT. 1.
Definitions
and Statutes.

A "heavy motor car" is one which exceeds 2 tons in weight unladen (o). Such cars are subject to the Heavy Motor Car Order, 1904; but, as regards matters not expressly mentioned in that Order, the other Orders apply so far as they are not inconsistent with its provisions (p).

"Heavy motor car."

The term "trailer" is commonly used to denote any vehicle drawn by a locomotive, and is recognised by the Heavy Motor Car Order, 1904 (q). The term "wagon," when used in connexion with heavy locomotives, includes trucks, carts, carriages and other vehicles (r).

"Trailer."
"Wagon."

In calculating the weight of a vehicle unladen, the weight of any water, fuel or accumulators used for the purpose of propulsion is not to be included (s).

Weight

685. The term "highway" in the statutes and orders relating to motor cars includes a roadway to which the public are granted access (t).

Highway.

SECT. 2.—Heavy Locomotives.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Registration and Licensing.

686. A heavy locomotive, not being a steam roller belonging to a road authority and used by it within its district, may not be used on any highway unless it is either licensed or registered in accordance with the following provisions (a), which do not, however,

Necessity for (n) Pilgrim v. Simmonds, supra.

(o) Heavy Motor Car Order, 1904, art. 2.

(p) Ibid., art. 16.

(q) Ibid., art. 2. The term is so used throughout the portion of this title dealing with light locomotives or motor cars.

(r) It is so defined for the purposes of the Locomotives Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 29), s. 17 (1), and is so used throughout the portion of this title dealing with heavy locomotives.

(s) Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 36), s. 1 (2); Motor Car (Registration and Licensing) Order, 1903, art. 21 (Stat. R. & O. (t) Motor Car Act, 1903 (3 Edw. 7, c. 36), s. 20 (1); Motor Car (Registration and Licensing) Order, 1903, art. 21; Motor Cars (Use and Construction) Order, 1904, art. 1. The Heavy Motor Car Order, 1904, does not contain an express provision to this effect, but this appears to be immaterial; see Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 31.

(a) Locomotives Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 29), ss. 9 (10), 10 (4), (6). The following penalties may be imposed:—for a locomotive which ought to be licensed but is not, not exceeding £10; for one which ought to be registered but is not, not exceeding £5 (ibid.). A locomotive working on a tramway laid along a highway is, apparently, not being used on the highway so as to require licensing or registration under these provisions (Bell v. Stockton etc. Tramway Co. (1887), 51 J. P. 804).

637. A heavy locomotive, other than an agricultural locomotive (c), a locomotive not used for haulage purposes, a steam roller, or a locomotive belonging to a road authority when used by it within its district, must be licensed by the council of the county or county borough in which it is at the time ordinarily used or to be used (d). The licence enures for one year from its date; and the maximum fee therefor is £10, if the weight of the locomotive, exclusive of water and coal, does not exceed 10 tons, with an addition not exceeding £2 for every ton or fraction of a ton beyond that weight (e). On the grant of a licence the council must provide the grantee with a licence plate bearing the date, the number of the licence and the council's name (f). Such plate must be fixed to the locomotive in a conspicuous position, and must not be removed without the council's consent while the licence is in force; with such consent, however, it may be transferred to another locomotive belonging to the same owner (g).

Additional licence for other area.

If a locomotive is duly licensed in accordance with the foregoing provisions in some county or county borough, an additional licence therefor may be taken out at a reduced fee in any other county or county borough, in the same manner and subject to the same provisions as in the case of the original licence, except that it will expire on the same date as the original licence (h).

Daily fee in other area.

A locomotive may not be used on any highway in a county or county borough in which it is not licensed, except on payment to the council of that county or county borough of a fee not exceeding 2s. 6d. for each day on which it is so used (i).

(b) Locomotives Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 29), s. 18 (3).

(c) The term "agricultural locomotive" includes any locomotive used solely for threshing, ploughing, or any other agricultural purpose, and any locomotive the property of one or more owners or occupiers of agricultural land employed solely for the purposes of their farms, and not let out on hire (ibid., s. 17 (1)). As to what is an "agricultural purpose," see Ellis & Co. v. Hulse (1889), 23 Q. B. D. 24; Murch v. Baker (1891), 55 J. P. 583; Hoddell v. Parker, [1910] 2 K. B. 323; compare *R. v. (d) Locomotives Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 29), ss. 9 (1), (2), 17 (1). The Common Council of the City of London is a licensing authority (ibid., s. 17 (3)). As to deciding any dispute as to where the licence should be taken out, see ibid., s. 9 (2). A licence cannot be refused if the locomotive complies with the statutory requirements and bye-laws (R. v. Middlessex County Council (1898), 15 T. L. R. 14).

(i) Ibid., s. 9 (9); the penalty is a sum not exceeding £10 (ibid., s. 9 (10)). The effect of the foregoing provisions is that the locomotive must be licensed in its own area; if used in another area, it must either have an additional licence for that area or must pay a daily fee. A steam roller merely passing through an area is being "used" there (London County Council v. Wood, [1897] 2 Q. B. 482).

638. A heavy locomotive not requiring to be licensed under the foregoing provisions must, unless it be a steam roller belonging to a road authority and used by the authority within its district, be registered in the county or county borough in which it is ordinarily used or to be used in such manner as the council of that county or county borough may direct (k). A fee not exceeding 2s. 6d. may be charged for registration, and the council must provide the applicant with a plate bearing the registered number of the locomotive (l). Such plate must be fixed in a conspicuous position on the locomotive, and must not be removed without the council's consent (m).

642. A heavy locomotive may not be used on any highway unless it complies with the following provisions (r): (1) A locomotive not drawing any wagon and not exceeding 3 tons in weight must have the tires of its wheels not less than 3 inches in width, with an additional inch for every ton or fraction thereof above the first 3 tons (s); (2) a locomotive drawing any wagon

SECT. 2.
Heavy Locomotives.

Maximum width and weight.

must, if constructed since the 16th August, 1878, have the tires of its driving wheels not less than 2 inches in width for every ton of its weight, unless the diameter of such wheels exceeds 5 feet, when the width of the tires may be reduced in the same proportion as the diameter is increased, but in such case the width of the tires must not be less than 14 inches (a); (3) a locomotive may not without special sanction exceed 9 feet in width or 14 tons in weight (b); (4) the driving wheels of a locomotive must be cylindrical, and either (i.) smooth-soled, or (ii.) shod with diagonal crossbars of not less than 3 inches in width nor more than $\frac{3}{4}$ inch in thickness, extending the full breadth of the tire, the space intervening between each such crossbar not to exceed 3 inches, or (iii.) shod with wooden blocks satisfying certain requirements, or (iv.) provided with a single row of movable feet satisfying certain requirements (c).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Construction, Weight, and Loads of Wagons.

643. No wagon drawn or propelled by a heavy locomotive may, unless it has cylindrical wheels (d), carry any greater weight than is permitted by the Turnpike Roads Act, 1822 (e), for such a carriage; if it has cylindrical wheels (d) it may not carry, over and above its own weight, any greater weight than $1\frac{1}{2}$ tons for each pair of wheels, unless the fellys, tires or shoes are 4 inches or more in breadth, nor any greater weight than 2 tons for each pair of wheels, unless the fellys, tires or shoes are 6 inches or more in breadth, nor any greater weight than 3 tons for each pair of wheels, unless the fellys, tires or shoes are 8 inches or more in breadth, and for every single wheel one-half of that permitted to be carried on a pair of wheels, and in no case may it carry a greater weight than 4 tons on each pair of wheels or 2 tons on each wheel; but if it has springs upon each axle, one-sixth more weight is permissible on each pair of wheels (f). These limits do not apply to any wagon carrying only one block, plate, cable, roll, vessel of stone

Exceptional loads.

(a) Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 77), s. 28 (2). A proviso to ibid., s. 28, permits the use of a locomotive constructed before the passing of the Act if its tires are at least 9 inches in width.

(b) Ibid., s. 28 (3), and proviso. The use of larger locomotives may be specially sanctioned by the Common Council of the City of London and the councils of counties, county boroughs, and larger quarter sessions boroughs (ibid.; Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), ss. 3 (8), 35 (4) (a), 40 (8), 41 (4) (a)).

For decisions upon earlier enactments as to "shoes," see Stringer v. Sykes (1877), 41 J. P. 296; Body v. Jeffery (1878), 42 J. P. 121. The use in frosty weather of metal spikes which damage the road is a breach of the statutory provision (Milne & Co. v. MacLennan (1902), 4 Fraser (Justiciary Cases), 79).

(d) For a definition of cylindrical wheels, see the Turnpike Roads Act, 1822 (3 Geo. 4, c. 126), s. 9, referred to in the Locomotives Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 70), s. 1.

or metal or other single article exceeding 16 tons in weight, but the fellies, tires, or shoes of the wagon must not be less than 8 inches in breadth; and any damage arising from its use is to be deemed damage caused by excessive weight within the meaning of the statutory provisions as to extraordinary traffic and excessive weight (g).

SECT. 2.
Heavy Locomotives.

644. The council of a municipal borough as regards any highway within it, and the council of any county as regards any highway within it and not within a borough, may permit a wagon to carry weights in excess of those mentioned above (h); for such purpose a council may act through its surveyor or other authorised officer (i).

Permission to exceed limit.

A person who without such permission uses on any highway a wagon to carry weights in excess of those above mentioned, or being the owner thereof permits it to be so used, is liable to a penalty not exceeding £10 (k).

The weight unloaded of every wagon drawn or propelled by a heavy locomotive must be conspicuously and legibly affixed thereto (l).

Weight plate.

645. Road authorities may erect weighing machines, and may by their servants require persons in charge of heavy locomotives and wagons to take the same to such machines to be weighed (m). If the weight is found to be within the authorised limits, the authority must pay for any loss caused by the delay (n). Certificates of weight are to be given, conferring exemption from weighing during the continuance of the same journey (o).

Weighing machines.

SUB-SECT. 4.—Conditions of and Restrictions on Use.

646. A heavy locomotive may not be used on any highway to draw more than three loaded wagons, exclusive of any wagon solely used for carrying water for the locomotive, without the consent, so far as regards highways in a borough, of the council of the borough, and, so far as regards other highways, of the county council (p).

SECT. 2.

Heavy Locomotives.Number of attendants.

647. When a heavy locomotive is passing on any highway, the following rules must be observed (q):—

(1) Two persons must be employed in driving or attending to it; (2) except in the case of a steam roller, another person (r) must be employed to accompany it in such a manner as to be able to give assistance to any person with horses or horse-drawn carriages, and must give such assistance when required; (3) if it is drawing more than three wagons another person must be employed to attend to the wagons.

So long as a heavy locomotive has its fires alight, or contains in itself sufficient motive power to move it, one person must remain in attendance whilst it is on any highway, although stationary (s).

Lights.

648. A heavy locomotive worked on a highway must carry two efficient lights affixed conspicuously, one on each side, on the front thereof (t), and also an efficient red light on the rear of the locomotive, or, if it is drawing wagons, on the rear of the last wagon, fixed in such a manner as to be conspicuous (a). The lights required to be carried on a locomotive or its wagons, whether stationary or passing on any highway, must be carried between the hours of one hour after sunset and one hour before sunrise from the 1st April to the 30th September, and between sunset and sunrise from the 1st October to the 31st March (a); they must be fitted with such shutters or other contrivances as will enable the light to be temporarily screened in an effective manner (a).

Safety of other traffic.

649. When a heavy locomotive is being worked on a highway, the following provisions must be observed (b):—

(1) The driver must give as much space as possible for the passing of other traffic; (2) the whistle must not be sounded; the cylinder taps must not be opened within sight of any person riding, driving, leading, or in charge of, a horse on the road; the steam must not be allowed to attain a pressure exceeding the limit fixed by the safety valve, so that no steam may blow off when the locomotive is on the road; (3) it must be instantly stopped on any person with a horse or horse-drawn carriage putting up his hand as a signal for it to be stopped.

Speed.

650. A heavy locomotive may not be driven along any highway at a speed greater than four miles an hour, or through (q) Locomotives Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 29), s. 5 (1). There is a special proviso in favour of locomotive plough engines (ibid.). The penalty on the owner is a sum not exceeding £10 (ibid., s. 5 (5)).

(r) Under a similar provision a boy has been held in Scotland not to be a "person," i.e., not a competent person (Smith v. Wood (1882), 10 Rettie (Justiciary Cases), 31, 33). A person leading a pony and cart may be a sufficient attendant (Davis v. Brown (1879), 43 J. P. 416).

any city, town, or village at a speed greater than two miles an hour (c).

651. The council of a county, a county borough, or a non-county borough containing in 1881 a population of 10,000, may by bye-law (d) (1) prohibit or restrict the use of heavy locomotives on any specified highway in the county or borough, on account of its being crowded or unfitted for locomotive traffic, or of the inconvenience caused to the inhabitants, or of any other reasonable cause; (2) regulate the use of heavy locomotives and of wagons drawn by them in any highway within the county or borough; (3) prohibit or restrict the use of a heavy locomotive on any specified bridge (e) within the county or borough, if satisfied that it is unsuited for such traffic, or that such use would be attended with damage to the bridge or danger to the public.

SECT. 2.
Heavy Locomotives.

Bye-laws restricting use :
on highways ;

on bridges.

Such a council, where a bye-law prohibits the use of a locomotive on any highway, may give special permission for its use thereon, if in any case it appears necessary for any particular purpose; but if a bridge is to be used, the council must first obtain the consent of the person liable to repair the same, and may, with such consent, give its permission subject to payment of the cost of temporarily strengthening the bridge (f).

652. It is unlawful for the owner or driver of any heavy locomotive to drive it over any suspension bridge, or over any bridge on which a conspicuous notice has been placed by the surveyor or persons liable to repair the bridge that it is insufficient to carry weights beyond the ordinary traffic of the district, without previously obtaining the consent of the surveyor, bridgemanster, or persons liable to repair (g).

Heavy

(c) Locomotives Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 83), s. 4; the penalty is a sum not exceeding £10 (ibid.). This provision was held applicable to a railway engine running over lines laid along a highway between a station and a pier (London and South Western Rail. Co. v. Myers (1881), 45 J. P. 731).

(d) Locomotives Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 29), s. 6 (1), (6). The Corporation of the City of London may make similar bye-laws (ibid., s. 6 (5)). A penalty for breach of a bye-law may be imposed not exceeding £5 (ibid., s. 6 (2)). As to the making and confirmation of bye-laws, matters to be considered by the Local Government Board when asked to confirm them, representations to and inquiries by the Board etc., see ibid., ss. 6 (3), (4), 15. The Board has issued model bye-laws under this provision. As to bye-laws generally, see title PUBLIC HEALTH AND LOCAL ADMINISTRATION, Vol. XXIII, pp. 388 et seq.

(e) Under the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 77), s. 31, certain councils could by bye-law prohibit the use of heavy locomotives on specified bridges. A bye-law so made would appear to be still operative as to any particular bridge as to which no bye-law has been made under the powers here stated; see Locomotives Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 29), s. 18 (1), (2). A locomotive hauling wagons across a bridge, but not itself crossing the bridge, is not "using" it (Dawson v. Cruit (1884), 48 J. P. 148). As to extraordinary traffic, see title HIGHWAYS, STREETS, AND BRIDGES, Vol. XVI., pp. 174 et seq.

(f) Locomotives Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 29), s. 6 (1). The permission may be given by the council's surveyor or other authorised officer (ibid., s. 14).

(g) Locomotive Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 70), s. 6. Apparently this provision can only be enforced by indictment or action for an injunction.

SECT. 2.
Heavy Locomotives.
 Appeal against restrictions. 653. If an owner of a locomotive is aggrieved by any restriction or prohibition placed on the passing of locomotives over any bridge, either under the provision just stated or any bye-law (h), he may appeal to the Local Government Board, or, if the bridge be repairable by a railway company, to the Board of Trade (i). The Board, if it considers that the bridge is sufficient to bear locomotives, and that there is no other reasonable cause for imposing the restriction or prohibition, may order such restriction to be removed or varied, and the order must be complied with (k). If, however, circumstances alter, the prohibition or restriction may be reimposed, subject to a like appeal (l).

Menai Bridge. 654. No heavy locomotive may be driven over the Menai Bridge when prohibited by official notice thereon, and no appeal lies against any such prohibition (m).

Passing other locomotives. 655. No heavy locomotive may be taken across any bridge so as to meet or pass any other locomotive on such bridge (n).

Liability for damage to bridges. 656. If damage is done by a locomotive (o), or a wagon drawn by it, to any bridge vested in or repairable by persons other than a highway authority, such persons are by statute relieved of any liability to repair the damage, or to pay compensation in respect of any resulting obstruction or delay to users of the bridge, or of the river, canal, or railway crossed by it. The owner, and the person in charge, of the locomotive are liable for repair of the bridge, and are also liable to pay compensation in respect of the obstruction and delay (p).

SUB-SECT. 5.—Miscellaneous.

Tolls. 657. The Locomotive Act, 1861 (q), fixed the scale of tolls to be charged under any Turnpike or Public Bridge Act in respect of locomotives or vehicles drawn by them, and repealed (r) existing scales, but without prejudice to any tolls authorised to be taken in respect of private roads or private bridges or the roads comprised in the Commercial Roads Continuation Act, 1849 (s).

Vehicles drawn by heavy locomotives and containing materials exempted from toll under any statute applicable to horse-drawn vehicles are entitled to the same exemption (t).

658. The provisions of any general or local Act relating to highways apply to heavy locomotives, or vehicles drawn by them and their owners, drivers and attendants, as if they were drawn by animal power, so far as those provisions are not altered by, or inconsistent with, the provisions of the statutes regulating the use of such locomotives (u).

A locomotive may be requisitioned as a carriage for military purposes in case of emergency (v).

The statutory restrictions as to the use of engines and machinery within 25 yards of a road unless screened from view (v) do not prohibit the use of locomotives for ploughing within that distance, if a person is stationed in the road to signal to the driver when it is necessary to stop and to assist horses and carriages, so long as the driver does stop in proper time (a).

659. The use of steam locomotives in any street constructed under the Thames Embankment Act, 1862 (b), is prohibited (c).

660. Nothing in the Locomotives Acts, 1861 and 1865 (d), is to authorise the use on a highway of any locomotive, heavy or light (e), which is so constructed or used as to cause a public or private nuisance (f).

661. The Crown is not bound by the Acts relating to heavy locomotives or by bye-laws made thereunder (g).

or wagon is liable to a penalty, has in fact been committed by some servant, workman or other person, that person is liable to the same penalty (h).

Where an owner is charged with any such offence, he may, upon information duly laid by him, have any other person whom he charges as the actual offender brought before the court at the time fixed for hearing the charge, and if, after the commission of the offence has been proved, the owner satisfies the court that he used due diligence to enforce the execution of the Act, and that the other person committed the offence without his knowledge, consent or connivance, such other person must be convicted, and the owner is exempt from any fine (i).

SUB-SECT. 7.—Appeals.

Appeals.

663. An appeal lies to quarter sessions against any conviction under the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878 (j). In the Metropolis there is a similar right in the case of any penalty exceeding £3 (k). Except as above mentioned, there appears to be no right of appeal to quarter sessions under the Acts regulating heavy locomotives (l).

SECT. 3.—Motor Cars (or Light Locomotives).

SUB-SECT. 1.—Registration of Cars.

Necessity for registration.

664. All motor cars used on a highway, or roadway to which the public are granted access, must, with the exception of certain cars "on trial" (m), be registered, and must carry identification plates (n). A trailer drawn by a motor car does not require registration (o).

The register.

In general (p), a motor car must be registered with the council of a county or county borough (q). Every such council must keep a register for the registration of motor cars, and has assigned to it a letter or combination of letters as a distinguishing index mark (r). The register, for which a form is prescribed, must be kept in two parts at least, one being reserved for heavy motor cars; and may,

(r) Many councils have now more than one such mark.

SECT. 3.
Motor Cars
(or Light Locomotives).

Registration.

665. The owner of a motor car desiring to register it with any council must with his application furnish certain prescribed particulars (t); and a fee of 20*s.*, or, in the case of a motor cycle 5*s.*, must be paid before it can be registered (u). The council on receipt of any such application with the required particulars and fee must forthwith assign a separate number to the car, register it by making the required entries in the register, and furnish the owner with a copy of such entries (a).

Change of ownership.

666. If the ownership of a car is changed, notice of the change must be given either by the new or by the old owner to the registering council and an application made to either cancel the registration or to continue it under the new ownership. If the only application made is for cancellation, the registration must be cancelled; if an application is made for continuance, the new owner must furnish the necessary particulars as to ownership, and on receipt of a fee of 5*s.*, or, in the case of a motor cycle 1*s.*, the council must alter the register, and furnish the new owner with a copy of the altered entries. If the above provisions are not complied with the registration of the car becomes void. The notice may be given, and the application or alteration made, before the date of the actual change of ownership, so as to operate from that date (b). If any circumstance, other than a change of ownership, occurs in relation to any car affecting the accuracy of any particulars entered as respects that car in the register, the owner must forthwith inform the registering council, which must without charge forthwith cause the entries to be amended and furnish the owner with a copy of the entries as so amended (c). If a council is satisfied that a motor car registered with it is destroyed, broken up, or permanently removed from the United Kingdom, or registered with another authority, or if the owner requests the council in writing to cancel the registration, except where in case of change of ownership there is an application to continue it, the council must cancel the entries relating to the car; and may, if it sees fit, assign the same registered number to any other motor car, whether belonging to the same or another owner (d).

667. An identification mark indicating the registered number of the car and the registering council must be fixed on the car, or

Front and back plates.	The mark to be carried by a motor car must consist of two plates (f) bearing the council's index mark followed by the car's registered number, and conforming as to lettering, numbering and otherwise with prescribed conditions (g). The plates must be fixed, one on the front and the other on the back of the car, in an upright position, so that every letter or figure is upright and easily distinguishable from the front of the car and from behind the car respectively ; but in the case of a motor cycle of a weight unladen not exceeding 3 cwt. the front plate may be one with duplicate faces so fixed that the letters or figures are easily distinguishable from either side, though not from in front of the cycle. Subject to the foregoing provisions, the plates are to be fixed in the position indicated in the particulars furnished to the council on application for registration or subsequently, or, if the council is not satisfied with the position so indicated, in such position as it directs. So long as the provisions of the Order are complied with, different plates may be used on a car by day and night or on different occasions (h). When another vehicle is attached to a motor car either in front or behind, the plate required to be fixed on the front or on the back of the car, or a duplicate thereof, must be fixed on the front or on the back of the vehicle attached, as the case requires, in the same manner as the plate is required to be fixed on the car (i). Whenever during the period between one hour after sunset and one hour before sunrise a motor car is used on a public highway, a lamp must be kept burning on the car, so contrived as to illuminate by reflection, transparency or otherwise, and render easily distinguishable every letter or figure on the plate fixed on the back of the car, or of any vehicle attached to its back ; but in the case of a motor cycle of a weight unladen not exceeding 3 cwt. the front plate may, if preferred, be thus illuminated instead of the back plate (j).
Illumination of mark.	A registering council may supply and charge for plates (k).
Penalty for using unregis- tered car.	668. If a motor car is used on a highway without being registered, or if the identification mark required to be fixed in accordance with the Motor Car Act, 1903 (l), is not so fixed, or if being so fixed it is in any way obscured, or rendered or allowed to become not easily distinguishable, the driver is guilty of an offence under the Act, unless, in the case of a prosecution for obscuring a mark or rendering or allowing it to become not easily distinguishable, he proves that he has taken all steps reasonably practicable to prevent it being obscured or rendered not easily distinguishable (m). A person is not, however, liable to a penalty under this provision (1) if he proves that he has had no reasonable opportunity of registering the car and that it is being driven on the highway for the purpose of being so registered (n); or (2) if he is driving a car which is entitled to bear a general identification mark, and has such a mark fixed upon it in the required manner (o).

SECT. 3.
Motor Cars
(or Light Locomotives).

669. A council in whose area are situated the business premises of any manufacturer of, or dealer in, motor cars, may, upon payment of such annual fee not exceeding £3 as they require, assign to him a general identification mark for use on any car on trial after completion or on trial by an intending purchaser (p). The mark will be such as the council directs in each case, provided that (1) it must consist of two plates, each bearing the council's index mark and some other distinguishing letter or letters, and each having placed thereon or annexed thereto some distinguishing number; (2) the plates must be coloured differently to the ordinary marks; and (3) the lettering and numbering must as far as possible be similar to those required for the ordinary marks. Whenever the general identification mark is used on a car, the manufacturer or dealer must keep a record of the distinguishing number placed on or annexed to the plates on that occasion, and of the name and address of the driver. If the general mark is used at the same time on more than one car, different distinguishing numbers must be used. The same provisions as to fixing and illuminating the plates apply as in the case of ordinary marks. The council must keep a register of general identification marks assigned by it (q).

General
marks.

670. A council must on request by any other registering council, or by any police authority, or by any superior officer of police or constable authorised by him, provide free of charge a copy of the entries in its register of cars relating to any specified car, or of the entries in its register of general marks relating to any specified manufacturer or dealer. On payment of a fee of 1s., the council must supply to any other applicant a copy of the entries relating to any specified car, if he shows that he has reasonable cause for requiring such a copy (r).

Inland Revenue officers may without charge at all reasonable times inspect the register of cars and take copies of any entries (r).

SECT. 3.
Motor Cars
(or Light Locomotives).

The record of numbers and of drivers' names and addresses kept by a manufacturer or dealer to whom a council has assigned a general identification mark is open to inspection by the council, and by any superior officer of police, or constable authorised by such officer (s).

Forgery of marks.

671. Any person who forges, or fraudulently alters, or uses, or fraudulently lends, or allows to be used by any other person, any mark for identifying a motor car is guilty of a statutory offence (t).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Licensing of Drivers.

The register
of licences.

672. The council (u) of every county or county borough must grant a licence to drive a motor car to any applicant not otherwise disqualified (a) who resides in its area or satisfies the council that he has no residence in the United Kingdom (b), on payment of a fee of 5s.; and must keep a register of such licences according to a prescribed form (c). The licence lasts for twelve months from the date of its grant; it is renewable, and the same provisions apply to a renewal as to a grant (d). A person under seventeen is disqualified for obtaining a full licence, but if over fourteen he may receive a licence limited to driving motor cycles (e); any person already holding a licence is, while it is in force, disqualified for obtaining another licence (e). Any person whose licence is suspended, or who is declared by a court to be disqualified for obtaining a licence (f), is, during the period of suspension or disqualification, disqualified for obtaining a licence (g).

If any person who is disqualified for obtaining a licence applies for or obtains one whilst so disqualified, or if any person whose licence has been indorsed applies for or obtains a licence without giving particulars of the indorsement, he is guilty of a statutory offence (h).

Application
for licence.

673. Applicants for grants and renewals must furnish to the licensing council the prescribed particulars, and their applications may be received and dealt with at any time within a month before the date on which the grant or renewal is to take effect (i). Forms are prescribed for licences and renewals (k). If a person satisfies

SECT. 3.
Motor Cars
(or Light Locomotives).

674. Any licensing council must, on application by any other such council, any police authority, any superior officer of police or constable authorised by such officer, forthwith supply free of charge a copy of the particulars in its register relating to any licence. Upon receiving from any court particulars of any conviction of the holder of a licence and of the court's order, the council must send a copy to the police authority for the area in which the holder resides (m).

Copies of entries in

675. No person may drive a motor car on any highway or roadway to which the public are granted access (n), unless he is licensed for the purpose, and no person may employ an unlicensed person to drive a motor car (o). Any person driving a motor car must produce his licence on demand to any police constable; if he fails to do so, he is liable to a fine not exceeding £5 (p).

Driving without licence.

676. A licence suspended by a court (q) is of no effect during the term of suspension (r); and if any person who, under the provisions of that Act, is disqualified for obtaining a licence (s) obtains one while so disqualified, or if any person whose licence has been indorsed (t) obtains a licence without giving particulars of the indorsement, such licence is of no effect (u).

Void licences.

677. Any person who forges or fraudulently alters, or uses, or fraudulently lends, or allows to be used by any other person, any driver's licence, is guilty of an offence under the Motor Car Act, 1903 (a).

No person may cause or permit a motor car (b) to be used on any highway or roadway to which the public are granted access, or drive or have charge of a motor car when so used, unless the following conditions are satisfied (c):—(1) The motor car, if it exceeds in weight unladen 7 cwt., must be capable of being so worked that it may travel either forwards or backwards (d); (2) the motor car

During the period between one hour after sunset and one hour before sunrise the person in charge of a motor car or trailer must carry attached thereto a lamp so constructed and placed as to exhibit a light in accordance with the regulations made by the Local Government Board (l). Such regulations provide that no person may cause or permit a motor car, including a motor bicycle (m), to be used on any highway or road to which the public are granted access, or drive, or have charge of a motor car when so used, unless the lamp required to be carried attached to the motor car is so constructed and placed as to exhibit during the period between one hour after sunset and one hour before sunrise a white light visible within a reasonable distance in the direction in which the car is proceeding or is intended to proceed, and to exhibit a red light so visible in the reverse direction. It must be placed on the extreme off side in such a position as to be free from all obstruction to the light. Such lamp need not, however, exhibit a red light towards the rear if a separate lamp exhibiting such a light is carried attached at the back of the car (n). Lamps on motor cars or Trailers.

679. No person may cause or permit a motor car to be used on any highway or roadway to which the public are granted access, for the purpose of drawing any vehicle, or drive or have charge of a motor car when so used, unless the following conditions are satisfied:—(1) The conditions applicable to motor cars relating to limit of width, construction of tires, inscription of weight, and condition of cars and fittings, are to apply also to the vehicle drawn (p); (2) every vehicle exceeding 2 cwt. unladen, drawn by a motor car must have a brake in good working order of such efficiency that its application will cause two wheels on the same axle to be so held as to be effectually prevented from revolving or will have the same effect in stopping the vehicle as if such wheels were so held (q); (3) a vehicle required by the last provision to have a brake must carry a person competent to apply the same efficiently, unless the application of either of the brakes on the motor car brings simultaneously into action the brake on the vehicle drawn by it, or unless the brake on the vehicle drawn can be applied from the motor car by a person thereon, independently of the brakes on the car (r).

Attendant.

680. Every motor car must be so constructed as to enable the driver, when the car is stationary otherwise than through an enforced stoppage owing to necessities of traffic, to stop the action of any machinery attached to or forming part of the car, so far as may be necessary for the prevention of noise. The driver must on every such occasion make prompt and effective use of all such means for the prevention of noise, except when it is necessary to examine or work the machinery in consequence of some failure or derangement thereof (s).

Power to stop engine.

681. Every motor car must carry a bell or other instrument capable of giving audible and sufficient warning of its approach or position (t).

Bell or horn.

682. A person may not in any circumstances drive a motor car on a highway or roadway to which the public are granted access (u) at a speed exceeding twenty miles per hour, and within any limits or place referred to in regulations made by the Local Government Board (a), a person may not drive a motor car at a speed exceeding ten miles per hour. The penalty is a fine not exceeding for a first offence £10, for a second offence £20, and for any subsequent offence £50 (b).

A person cannot be convicted for exceeding the speed limit of twenty miles per hour merely on the opinion (c) of one witness as to the rate of speed (d); nor for exceeding any speed limit, unless he is warned (e) of the intended prosecution at the time when the offence is committed, or unless notice (f) of the intended prosecution is sent to him, or to the owner of the car as entered on the register, within such time, not exceeding twenty-one days, after the commission of the offence as the court thinks reasonable (g).

Reckless, negligent or
driving.

663. Any person who, on a public highway or roadway to which the public are granted access (h), drives a motor car recklessly or negligently, or at a speed or in a manner which is dangerous to the public, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, including the nature, condition, and use of the road, and to the amount of traffic which actually is at the time or might reasonably be expected to be (i) on the road, is guilty of an offence under the Motor Car Act, 1903 (j). A police constable may arrest without warrant the absence of evidence that the car was at the time of the warning exceeding the legal speed (Betts v. Stevens, [1910] 1 K. B. 1, per Lord ALVERSTONE, C.J., at p. 7; Bastable v. Little, [1907] 1 K. B. 59).
